O Gator, Where Art Thou?

From staff and wire reports

Three men, all over the age of 50, were arrested for stealing a 14-foot stuffed alligator from a Michigan home. The victim realized the alligator was missing on June 25 and followed foot and tire tracks to find the men driving through mud with the alligator strapped to their pickup truck. The three men were reported to have been intoxicated. One of the men was put in a medically induced coma after the incident because of his blood-alcohol content.

The alligator cost $5,000 and was not damaged by the incident.

NOTED. A 32-year-old woman was arrested after entering a motel lobby without clothes and carrying a loaded gun. The woman said she had been using ecstasy and marijuana.

QUOTED. “You’d be surprised how hard it is to see an airplane coming at you,” — Larry Lewis, National Transportation Safety Board investigator.

CORRECTION

Due to a reporting error, July 7’s page 5 story “Carrboro biker brings donations to Mexico” incorrectly stated the translation of Vidas de Esperanza. The phrase translates as Lives of Hope. The article also incorrectly stated that the program is based out of Carrboro. It operates out of multiple locations in the Triangle.
The Daily Tar Heel apologizes for the errors.
