Correction: Miami lost NBA Finals

From staff and wire reports

Monday's Miami Herald incorrectly featured a full-page advertisement stating "Congratulations Miami" with hats and T-shirts featuring the logo of the Heat, Miami's NBA team, for sale at Macy's department store. One of the T-shirts included the words "Heat 2011 NBA Finals Champions."

The Heat's season ended in a loss to the Dallas Mavericks on Sunday in game 6 of the NBA Finals. The advertisement was featured under a story in the paper about the Heat's loss. Even if the Heat had won the game on Sunday, they would have still had to play in a game 7.

Elissa Vanaver, vice president for human resources at the Herald, called the advertisement a "production error." Macy's spokeswoman has apologized.

NOTED. Egyptian man Al Sayed al Essawy, 25, said he plans to fight a full-grown lion with his bare hands in front of the Pyramids of Giza. He said the economy and revolution have paved the way for this happening. Mounir Fakhry Abdel Nour, Egypt's Minister for Tourism, said the he is making sure this does not happen.

QUOTED. "What women want, women get." — Burger King's tagline for the new Spam miniature burger that is being released in Japan.

The item is an effort by Burger King to appeal to female consumers by offering items that are lighter than the other items on the menu.
