CARRBORO ROCKS*

Essentially, the Piedmont is the roots of an ancient coastal mountain chain that is now worn down to low relief. (en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Piedmont_(United_States)

Under the gently sloping streets of Carrboro lies a secret.
The remains of ancient mountains, once taller than the Himalayas have slowly worn away until they are now just

Carrboro rocks.

Workmen laying pipe hear a clank as their heavy equipment is chipped and broken by

Carrboro rocks.

Just across the tracks from a great and loved university, a small town sits in a Carolina blue shadow, trying not to be smug, knowing the secret

Carrboro rocks!

Summer in the farmers market, tomatoes, sweet corn, flowers explode with color, friends gather and talk of cooking tomatoes, growing flowers changing weather, changing lives with a spirit as solid as

Carrboro Rocks.

Young children at Wilson Park their laughter and their shouts echo into the future. One of them picks up a stone, and the necessary grown-up calls to him, do not throw

Carrboro Rocks.

CARRBORO ROCKS continued

A band is playing
On the lawn at Weaver Street
young people dance with hula hoops.
Their grace is astonishing.
Some in the audience rummage for comparisons
Paris? Seattle? But,
Carrboro is the Carrboro of the Piedmont,
Of the South, and

Carrboro Rocks!

While in the background Unsuspecting workmen begin to dig Clanking in 3/4 time,

It is summer, and

Carrboro Rocks!

*Billy Sugarfix has turned this poem into a song for the Carrboro Centennial!

The Cardinal

She came again this morning
To sit on railing of the stoop
By ever blooming azalea bush.
She lingered, seemed to study it.
The azalea is not yet lush
With green leaves and fuchsia flower.
Will she return to build --To keep me company?
I would enjoy a neighbor
Especially, a red one
To watch build her new home
And hatch her babies.
Perhaps I will be blessed.

Delaney Watson

To the Bishop Where'er She Be

This gentle kiss I send through sisters of the wind. A simple tenderness within that's brought forth; when we begin again in this world without end; settles us in blankets out of the cold, cold North.

Cozy comfort affords us the passions we seek. Within a house beside the hearth inside our heart, green spirits frolic among the words we speak. It's a timeless space dreams invoke of sacred art.

In my arms all wounds heal and scars dissolve, as your arms draw divine presences into our being. Gathering snow damps down the din of humanity.

Frost stains the window glass in intricate crystal designs formed around this moment we've conjured and reflects the beauty of our souls intertwined.

Digging...A Poet's Prayer

Restless dreams disappear into the fog.....slithering.

Space X...Future,
Archeologists, Climatologists,
Fortune seekers,
befuddling us, reaping
unfounded responses while vital force remains intact.

Earth, Breath, Life Source Ambivalence of solitude and calm...
Earth's nutrients, dissipate.

Without Breath all creatures, US included, become cased inmates, an unlikely escape. Without Life Source the mind's pursuit, indiscernible.
Without Earth, what was "Stone", eons ago, guided by an energy force, creating the NOW, pleading for an emerging indisputable Female energy, who gifted us birth...

Digging!

Ostara at the Blue Whale

The gray wall beside the Blue Whale becomes my perch to pen a March 1st verse as leap day has leapt off. Hand in hand the lovers stroll, young and old, from porches swept clean of winter's collections of dusty stuff.

Three days of spring air, warm and welcoming, coyly calls gentle fancies between frisky smiling folk. Morning birdsongs playfully give rise to friendly conversations in which Love is freely spoken.

The town is rousing itself from hibernation.
Persephone returns from Hades' cold palace.
Demeter is pleased and her children gaily frolic.

Daffodils; dancing joyous in celebration; mark, affectionately, a beginning to bliss. In your gorgeous green eyes, I see Grace angelic

JeanMarie Olivieri

The Ice Cream Man

Tinny music coming down the street signals the ice cream truck.

Mama, may I have some money?

Mama, may I get some ice cream?

Mama gives in, so she doesn't have to scream.

Silver in hand, I stand at the curb.

The children from the block, crowd around.

The ice cream man, in white, with a paper hat leans out of the door, and shouts,

"I got enough for everyone."

Popsicles and Dreamsicles, Drumsticks and Dilly Bars What's the biggest one I can get for my 50 cents? I promised I'd be a good girl and do my chores but all I really wanted was more, more, more.

OUT OF THE STORM

Out of the storm come only good things, or at least, beautiful to the human eye from a distance. This is what we believe, or would like to believe. in a world small, yet vast, where the purple in the waterspout in the horizon matches the purple around the eyes of the dead girl, her face and body the same as her rapist and murderer remembers, in all his dreams and nightmares. This is not what the couple in the white Mercedes sees. They see the whirlwind descending in the horizon like an elephant lowering its trunk in the water, and they see that trunk in the horizon far, far away in the distance as beautiful. They cannot see the fish being sucked up in the vortex of the storm, or the purple around the eyes of the dead girl, her mouth in the perfect "o" of a stifled scream, her dead body still perfect preserved, just beyond the couples' Mercedes, only 1500 feet away in the sand. No, the couple in the white Mercedes see only the storm in the distance, and they conclude as we all do, that out of the storm come only good things, or at least beautiful to the human eye from a distance. . .

Ceaseless Verse

The poetry of earth never ceases. In the poplar trees, the wind plays a flute.

Hyatt Mill Creek blows the tuba while a cardinal lifts tenor, and the owl hits bass notes.

The poetry of earth never ceases. Through a sea of grass, the cricket saws a fiddle and the crows squawk soaring over the cornfield. The poetry of earth never ceases.

Sybil Austin Skakle

FIRST AID

In their fishing boat beside the wharf,
He and his helper dropped fish they picked out of the nets into metal baskets.

Standing above them on the wharf, I caught his attention and told him why I came.
Chewing without teeth, his chin and nose
Nearly touching, he chewed,
Rolled the wad around, onto his tongue,
spit the wet, brown lump into the palm of his calloused, weathered hand, he Pinched off small bit and handed it up to me.
Chewing tobacco is first aid for a wasp sting.
I knew Uncle Monroe would share a bit.

Worldview

That person looks just like me. Not exactly.

His eyes are brown, his hair matted. His lips are thicker than mine. His skin, much more melanin.

Not exactly.

The nurse is taking from his arm that which she also took from me. His blood runs red, which is the same as mine. He looks just like me Exactly!

1962...Peninsula Hospital...Ca. Close, very close shave.
