Optimus Prime gets parking ticket

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

Transformers aren't exempt from the law, apparently. A giant truck decked out to look like Transformers character Optimus Prime was stationed outside of a Manhattan convention center for Hasbro's Toy Fair gala, an annual event that brings together thousands of toy manufacturers and buyers.

A Twitter user snapped photos of the Autobots leader and later noticed an illegal parking ticket visible on the truck's side.

The toy convention ends today, when Prime will presumably transform into a 28-foot robot, wage a battle for justice against the Decepticons and pay his fine through the Department of Finance.

NOTED. A Florida man went berserk in a bar last weekend after learning the women he had been buying drinks were actually men in drag, police said.

Cops arrested the man when he allegedly started fights with several customers and broke liquor bottles at the bar.

Police also found a six-inch hunting blade concealed in the man's waistband.

QUOTED. "It's just yet another example that the country has gone test crazy."

— Robert Schaeffer, a director of a nonprofit that advocates alternative testing methods, on placement tests Chicago children must take to attend top elementary schools.

More than 3,000 applications were filed for about 500 spots for Chicago Public Schools' classical and gifted kindergarten programs.
