Pocket dial betrays men to police

From staff and wire reports

Karma has never been so forward. Three larceny suspects driving in Clay, N.Y., on April 26 unwittingly turned themselves in to police after one of them inadvertently “pocket dialed” the emergency number — 911 — on his cellphone. Dispatchers relayed the men’s conversation — which included plans for break-ins in upstate New York — to deputies already looking for a suspicious person, said Kevin Walsh, Onondaga County sheriff. The men also described their surroundings and even remarked, “there go the cops now.” A deputy then turned around and apprehended the Kia Sportage full of tools. The men face grand larceny and stolen property charges.

NOTED. A man in Madisonville, Ohio, mooned an oncoming train after refusing to step off the railroad tracks as it approached. The train made an emergency stop just five feet from Terry Stanford, police said. When a conductor tried to move Stanford, he physically resisted. Police said Stanford has been arrested more than 36 times in his life.

QUOTED. “I feel sorry for them because if they get married, they’re going to have problems.” — Carolyn Mooyoung, who was informed that her and her husband’s Lehigh Acres, Fla., vacation home’s garage had been vandalized with a spray-painted marriage proposal. Neighbors have been congratulating the Mooyoungs, who have been married for 23 years.
