

BOE fines Ingram for dorm-storming early

BY BROOKE HEFNER
STAFF WRITER

The Board of Elections issued its first fine of the election season Tuesday against student body president candidate Rick Ingram for dorm-storming before the practice was allowed.

Ingram was fined $12.50, a total that represents 5 percent of the campaign spending limit.

The junior said he thinks the fine is a minor punishment.

"I see it as a slap on the wrist," Ingram said. "I didn't think that we had done anything wrong. They obviously didn't think it was too egregious either."

Andrew Phillips, chairman of the board, said the board looked at how campaign violations were handled in past elections.

"Our idea was to make the fine fair," Phillips said.

Dorm-storming is a strategy that allows candidates to canvas door-to-door in residence halls during the evening hours.

Phillips said candidates were told dorm-storming would not be allowed until Jan. 19.

Following the mandatory candidates' meeting Jan. 18, Phillips received complaints that Ingram and his staff were dorm-storming in violation of election rules.

Phillips said complaints were filed by former candidate Joey Guy, members from other campaign staffs and other students who were aware of the rules or somehow connected to those who attended the candidate meetings.

Phillips said the complaints cited dorm-storming that took place at residence halls ranging from Hinton James Residence Hall on South Campus to Cobb Residence Hall on North Campus.

"Once we determined that this was not an isolated incident we went ahead and called to initiate an investigation," Phillips said.

Phillips said the board contacted all of the candidates to ensure they understood dorm-storming could not take place until Jan. 19.

He added that Ingram claimed he and his staff did not hear representatives of the board say when dorm-storming would be legal.

"After reviewing, we determined that not hearing us say it was not a good enough excuse," Phillips said.

"After determining that, we could not let him off the hook."

Candidate Mary Cooper said she thought it was a fair decision.

"We were all informed that it was not something we could do on the 18th," Cooper said.

Candidate Ian Lee, who has also been the target of complaints, agreed that the board can be trusted to make the right decision.

"I have full faith in Andrew Phillips and the board to uphold the law and have clean and fair elections," Lee said.

Candidate Brooklyn Stephens said she did not feel the decision came soon enough.

"I feel like it should have been addressed prior to now," Stephens said. "I think it should have been toward signatures, not necessarily a fine."

Orange County announced a new leader Tuesday who will fill a seat that has been vacant since December.

Gary Shope, who was the vice president of the Research Triangle Foundation for more than 16 years, plans to help the county develop a new approach to economic development as the Interim Economic Development Director.

"We believe there are improvements that could be made on how the county does economic development," said Chapel Hill-Carrboro Chamber of Commerce President Aaron Nelson.

"We look forward to partnering with Mr. Shope on implementing change."

Shope's current contract is for six months, but County Manager Frank Clifton said he expects the contract to evolve into a long-term commitment.

"Right now we needed someone

"...We needed someone with a higher level of expertise than we currently had."

FRANK CLIFTON, ORANGE COUNTY MANAGER

with a higher level of expertise than we currently had in the house," Clifton said. "He fits all those criteria."

Shope said he will focus on bringing new businesses to the area, especially technology companies.

"I think we also need to be very selective in the kinds of industries and companies we go after," Shope said. "The abundance of IT and software companies could also easily find a home in Orange County given the proximity of the airport and quality housing and shopping and retail."

Orange County Commissioner Earl McKee said he thought focusing on what fits the county was also important.

"We must keep our minds open to everything ... And pick and choose projects that will be beneficial for the residents, and the tax base and the environment," McKee said. "We've got to take in all aspects."

Shope's in-depth experience and contacts throughout the state are crucial, McKee said.

"He's made a lot of contacts with different people and different companies," he said. "He'll help guide us as we go forward looking for a fit for Orange County."

Clifton said Shope's experience with state programs was important in the selection.

Shope has also worked with the N.C. Department of Commerce, and he said his understanding of how the department attracts businesses to the state will carry over as he tries to draw businesses to the county.

"That's not an easy assignment," he said. "Also how they recommend communities and regions — we want to make sure we'll get our fair opportunity to do that."

The slow pace of the economic recovery will give the town a chance to reorganize.

"I think it's still a little slow in the market place, so hopefully that will allow us to gain some momentum in this interim period," Shope said.
