

carrborocitizen.com

Partly Cloudy

SEPTEMBER 18, 2008 ◆ LOCALLY OWNED AND OPERATED ◆ VOLUME II NO. XXVII

FREE

PHOTO BY KEN MOORE Young gray tree frog on pickerelweed stem in Natural Science Museum's wild garden on Raleigh's

FLORA BY KEN MOORE

Wild encounters on Jones Street

ext week, Sep 24-30, is 'Take a Child Outside Week," and the North Carolina Museum of Natural Sciences has planned some specific activities to promote awareness (www.naturalsciences.org).

A visit to the Museum of Natural Sciences in Raleigh begins with awareness on the outside. Along the half-block-long north side of the museum facing Jones Street, there is a wild garden in dramatic contrast to the strictly regimented lawn and shrub monoculture of the North Carolina Legislature across the street. The museum's wild garden is by design a loose assemblage of plants representative of the botanical diversity of the state, from the seacoast to the mountains. Many of the plants from far reaches of the state will not survive on the museum's harsh north bank. Surprisingly, some do, like the native mountain bush honeysuckle, Diervilla sessilfolia, which occurs naturally in only a few places at very high elevations. Not expected to survive along Jones Street, the mountain bush honeysuckle is thriving. I wonder that there may be some similarities between the harshness of the urban site and the high mountain elevations.

That 4,000-square-foot streetside wild garden attracts a great diversity of wild critters. Several species of birds nest there and feast on the variety of seeds, fruits and insects associated with the native plants. Praying mantises hunt atop the massive heads of Joe-Pye weed, Eupatorium fistulosum. Common Buckeye butterflies linger on the flower heads of rattlesnake master, Eryngium yuccifolium.

SEE FLORA PAGE 10

INSIDE

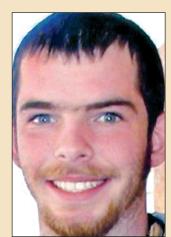

Phoenix Academy celebrates new home

See page 7

INDEX

Music Calendar Opinion6

A sad and twisted case of murder

Joshua M. Bailey was identified last weekend.

BY KIRK ROSS

Staff Writer

According to a Silver Alert issued for him more than a month ago, 20-yearold Joshua McCabe Bailey was last seen on Weaver Street at 2 p.m. on July 21.

Last week, Bailey's remains were uncovered off Big Woods Road in Chatham County, and now six young men are charged in his abduction and killing, the parents of one of those charged are facing accessory charges and a young woman and three of those charged in the Bailey case are facing kidnapping charges in a bizarre related abduction and assault.

According to a statement issued Monday, Investigator Tim Horne of the Orange County Sheriff's office and agents from the State Bureau of Investigation learned that Bailey had been shot and killed and his body buried in a wooded area off Twisted Oak Drive, a dead-end street off Bethel Hickory Church Grove Road.

On Thursday, investigators searched the site, but did not find Bailey's body. They learned that night that the body had been moved to Chatham County. On Friday, they located the grave at a site off Big Woods Road and were assisted by an N.C. State professor of anthropology in excavating the site and recovering the remains.

Bailey was identified through dental records by the North Carolina Medical Examiner's office, which also determined that he had been shot.

Charged Monday with first-degree murder and kidnapping are Brian Gregory Minton, 18, Jacob Alexander Maxwell, 18, Brandon Hamilton Green, 26, Ryan Ladar Davis Lee, 20, and Jack Johnson II, 19, all of Chapel Hill. Police also charged Sarah Krombach, 23, of Chapel Hill with first-degree kidnapping of Matt Johnson, 21, of Wilmington, who investigators believe shot Bailey. He was charged Tuesday.

SEE MURDER PAGE 8

Board waits

BY SUSAN DICKSON

Staff Writer

Main Street project.

on 300 E. Main

After hours of public comment, discussion and presentation from developers, the Ĉarrboro Board of Aldermen on Tuesday postponed a decision on the proposed 300 East

Board members said they had additional questions about the development, and continued the public hearing and postponed a vote on the project until a special meeting on Sept. 30. The board opened the on 5.24 acres extending from the intersection of Main and Boyd streets near

Nice Price Books to the present municipal parking lot on the corner of Main and Roberson streets. It includes a 150-room Hilton Garden Inn hotel, a five-story parking deck, a central pedestrian plaza, three large commercial buildings and extensive changes for Cat's Cradle ties of Chapel Hill LLC, first brought a garding the specifics of the project, including water conservation tools, shade requirements, traffic calming, signage

during construction, lighting details

wanted more time to work with the de-

Board member Jackie Gist said she site plan to the board in 2004.

The developer, Main Street Proper-

Board members raised questions re-

and The ArtsCenter.

The 507,500-square-foot project is public hearing on Aug. 26.

Playmakers Rep presents: Pericles

BY SUSAN DICKSON

Staff Writer

As in many of Shakespeare's plays, over the course of Pericles the protagonist loses everything - family, love, fortune and friends.

"But unlike other plays, he doesn't do anything wrong to lose everything," said Joe Haj, producing artistic director of PlayMakers Repertory Theater and director of the company's production of Pericles.

Moreover, "He gets it all back, and he doesn't do anything right to get it back."

BY TAYLOR SISK

Staff Writer

Pericles is one of Shakespeare's son at the theater, but this produclesser-known works, which some tion is different, featuring the origiconsider to be a "problem play," but nal music of Jack Herrick of the Red Haj wanted to bring it to the stage of the Paul Green Theater to hopefully share his love and understanding of the play with a larger audience.

"I think it really is much more the way life actually goes, where it's not just the very good people who get the good things," he said. "I think that's where the play is profound and successful."

PlayMakers has produced Pericles once before, during the 1991-92 seaClay Ramblers.

While not a musical, the production places a heavy emphasis on Herrick's music, which he performs with 14 cast members throughout the production. Both Haj and Herrick felt the music should play an important part in the play, which begins, after all, with the words of Gower, "To sing a song that old was sung..."

SEE SHAKESPEARE PAGE 8

velopers to ensure the project is perfect. "This is a permanent change to the face of Carrboro. It's something that, once it's done, we can't go back on," she said.

Gist said she was specifically concerned about parking and traffic issues downtown.

"I am not comfortable kind of writing a blank check.... I would like some things in place that give us more control as it goes along," she continued. "I want to know what it's going to look like."

Board member Joal Hall Broun said the board should make a decision soon on the project.

"There needs to be some standard process, because this project isn't going to be the only one this size," she said. "We're setting a precedent by what we do."

Sherman Richardson, one of the partners in the eight-member corporation, urged the board to make a decision on the project.

SEE BOARD PAGE 8

At a Tuesday night solid-waste infringing capacity Tuesday night as considered a viable option.

transfer station work session, Rogers-Eubanks community members and their supporters once again turned out in force. With some lifting signs that read "No to Eubanks-Rogers Rd. Solid Waste Transfer Site," they urged that after 36 years of hosting the Orange County Landfill, Eubanks Road should be removed from consideration as a potential transfer station site.

And while Eubanks remains on the list of potential sites, at least one Orange County commissioner hinted Tuesday night that when the list is further narrowed on Oct. 21, Eubanks might well no longer be on it.

Rogers-Eubanks hangs on, transfer talks continue

The Southern Human Services Center was packed to near fire codethe county commissioners picked up the transfer station siting search process that began last winter. With the landfill projected to reach capacity in 2011 and the board of commissioners having decided to build a transfer station to transport our solid waste outside the county, the list of potential sites for the station has now been reduced to 10.

Eubanks Road ranks fourth on that list, but residents of the largely black, working-class community believe that when community-specific criteria, including environmentaljustice considerations, are applied, as they will be prior to the Oct. 21 session, Eubanks should no longer be Olver Inc. – the consulting firm the commission hired to establish criteria, conduct the search and advise the commissioners on the selection of a site - initially identified 379 potential sites. Sites that are too far from major roads or the projected geographical center of the county's waste generation were then eliminated, as were those of historical, archeological and cultural

SEE TRANSFER PAGE 3

Spinning wheels with no mud slinging

RECENTLY ... By Valarie Schwartz

Thoughts of the Bynum Front Porch and a spinning wheel might not conjure visions of Las Vegas, but that's what an energetic Chatham County bunch has in mind. Bynum Front Porch board members may use a rocking chair as their trademark — and even allowed a couple of actors to rock on the porch (for a fair price) in a recent political announcement — but they are betting that plenty of people would like to help them raise money for some local programs by taking a few gambles. To that end, they're bringing in professional gaming tables and croupiers and have hired three Las Vegas lounge-style acts to perform at the Chatham Mills on Oct. 18 from 6:30 to 10 p.m.

The board expects 400 high rollers to cozy up in 12,000 feet of space that they will transform for Fabulous Casino Night. To complete the scene, they are asking attendees to dress up — men, pull out that (thrift store?) tuxedo; and ladies, get all dolled up and take it over the county line, where I've been assured — what happens in Pittsboro stays in

The $50 tickets will benefit community programs of the Chatham Arts Council and, of course, Bynum Front

Board member John Winecker has lived in Bynum since 2000 and teaches school in Goldston.

'The Chatham Arts Council is lacking 'undesignated' funds for them to

SEE RECENTLY PAGE 4

PHOTO BY VALARIE SCHWARTZ

The spinning wheel of fortune promises a Fabulous Casino Night for Bynum Front Porch board members Winecker and Barrow.