Pit Talk

A 7-year-old's perspective on the college experience

By Jordan Mareno
Staff Writer

My baby sister holds a surprising level of wisdom, given her short seven years of experience on this planet. She is not afraid of big people or big places and has spent the night at UNC twice since I have made my home here.

This morning, after she woke me up at 7:30, I treated her to a breakfast date at Rams Head Dining Hall. She was elated to fill up our table with pancakes with syrup, Lucky Charms and pink lemonade.

Given the kid's endless wisdom, I decided to inquire about her perspective on college. The answers I received were short and not all that insightful, to be honest. Apparently, sorting the marshmallows out from the oat pieces in your Lucky Charms is far more interesting than answering your big sister's annoying questions about college.

Q: If you were a college girl, how would you want to spend your weekends?

A: I would go see my family.

in BRIEF

SPORTS BRIEF

The North Carolina men's tennis team defeated the UCLA Bruins 4-2 in Charlottesville, Va., in the semifinal of the ITA National Team Indoor Championship on Sunday.

After losing the doubles point and falling down 2-1 after junior Brayden Schnur lost in straight sets, the Tar Heels rallied for three straight singles wins. Sophomore Robert Kelly clinched the match with a 4-6, 6-2, 6-3 win against the Bruins' Logan Staggs.
