Concealed in the crowd

Patrons with permits can now carry guns into bars

Mandey Brown, owner and bartender at Zog's Pool Hall, said that patrons who bring concealed guns into her bar will be asked to leave.

Mandey Brown said she wasn't surprised when a couple of customers asked if they could bring their guns to Zog's Pool Hall now that it's legal.

"I think that's going to die down," she said. "I think it's more of a show-off."

But Brown, who owns the bar on Henderson Street, said she won't allow guns at Zog's. A new law in North Carolina will allow people with concealed-carry permits to bring guns into bars, though the bill does allow businesses to choose to prohibit guns from their establishment.

Under current law, it is illegal to have a gun in places where alcohol is sold or consumed. In July, the General Assembly passed legislation making an exception to that rule for people with concealed-carry permits. The changes will go into effect Oct. 1.

"I just don't understand why somebody would need a gun here," Brown said.

"There's really no need. If someone does bring a gun up here, they will be asked to leave."

Some other Chapel Hill bar owners haven't worked out what they will do in response to the new legislation. The management team at Top of the Hill has not made a decision about whether they will allow guns, said floor manager Steve Torchio.

Torchio said he doesn't think the new law will cause problems.

"I would hope that it would not make too

Federal law aims to help students on scholarships buy books.

Some UNC professors may be breaking a federal law without realizing it — and University officials say there's not much they can do to enforce it.

According to the Higher Education Opportunities Act, any university receiving federal aid must make public all textbooks used for every course each semester.

The law requires that information about all textbooks used in UNC courses be available in the University's Student Stores.

George Morgan, textbook buyer at UNC Student Stores, said it's important for the store to carry every textbook a student might need, because some students have scholarship money that can only be used for textbooks at Student Stores.

About 43 percent of UNC students received need-based aid in 2012-13.

Morgan said he places orders for the textbooks requested by professors each semester. He said professors are responsible for reporting their textbooks to Student Stores, which is the official party responsible for keeping track of and posting the list of textbooks.

But Morgan said it's common for professors to fail to report their textbooks to Student Stores. Professors might mistakenly assume that their request rolls over to the next semester, or they might have difficulty using the Student Stores' online request form, Morgan said.

"Sometimes it's an honest mistake," Morgan said.

Kelly Hanner, textbook manager at Student Stores, said new faculty might not be aware of the policy. She said it's the responsibility of department chairs to educate faculty about the policy during orientation.

Morgan said enforcing the policy is tricky because it's hard to find out about textbooks that are unreported.

He said students sometimes inform Student Stores of a required textbook not available in Student Stores, in which case staff members tell North Carolina's Republican-controlled state legislature recently passed sweeping gun reforms allowing concealed handguns into formerly restricted areas across the state — including university campuses.

House Bill 937, signed into law by Gov. Pat McCrory on July 29, authorizes UNC-system President Tom Ross opposed the bill in its early stages, along with all UNCsystem chancellors and campus police chiefs.

In a statement released in April, Ross said public safety officers may have difficulty distinguishing criminal suspects from bystanders lawfully wielding guns when responding to an incident on campus.

"The potential for tragedy far outweighs

"We're at a point right now where it wouldn't be prudent to make any decision as to exactly how this would be enforced or approached at UNC," he said.

Board of Elections debates on-campus voting site

The Rams Head Dining Hall voting site might not be used in 2014.

By Jenny Surane City Editor

The Orange County Board of Elections is looking for a new oncampus UNC voting site for next year's elections after a curbside voting system failed to appease yearround Chapel Hill residents.

Members of the board debated the feasibility of keeping the Rams Head Dining Hall site as a viable voting location during its meeting Tuesday.

During election season, a curbside voter can pull up to the parking deck under Rams Head, and parking attendants notify voting officials that the voter is there. Then, the voting officials bring the voter a ballot. Voting sites are required to have this kind of curbside voting for handicapped voters.

But Jamie Cox, the board's secretary, said the curbside voting system at Rams Head wastes too much time for it to remain a practical voting site for the precinct.

"The only issue with our oncampus voting site is the curbside service and making sure it meets everyone's needs," Cox said. "It's difficult with the current system in place."

The board already approved the use of Rams Head for the 2013 municipal elections, but Cox said they are going to consider new campus sites for the elections in 2014.

"Right now, I think we need another location," said Kathy Knight, the chairwoman of the board.

"And it needs to be something that is also conducive to students."

The board is soliciting feedback from students and residents for adequate alternative sites on or near campus. Student Body President Christy Lambden said he attended Tuesday's meeting after fielding concerns that the board might eliminate early voting on campus.

"I think it's great that the board has a commitment to making sure students have a place to vote that's accessible," he said, adding that easy access for student voters and easy access for town voters at an early voting site do not have to be mutually exclusive.

There are 44 voting precincts in Orange County, and UNC's campus is divided between several precincts.

Ellie Kinnaird, who resigned from the N.C. Senate Monday, said she was happy that it seemed like the board wanted to maintain an oncampus voting site.

"I think that went really well for us," said Kinnaird, who left her position in the Senate to pursue a grassroots voting project.

Knight said she has fielded concerns from people who have fol-

BOG sees changes in board makeup

Sixteen new members will bring different perspectives to the board.

By Lucinda Shen

Assistant State & National Editor

The 16 new members of the UNCsystem Board of Governors were sworn in early this month and are ready to get to work — but some student groups are apprehensive.

The members were recently elected by the N.C. General Assembly, leading some critics to charge that the board is increasingly becoming an extension of the Republicandominated state government.

Campus Pride, a Charlotte-based student advocacy group, is concerned the board, which is largely composed of white males, does not represent the diverse system population and makes decisions based on political ideology.

"It is a board of people with only one viewpoint," said Romeo Jackson, a member of Campus Pride. "It is creating a culture of student voices being shut out."

Hannah Gage, emeritus member of the board and former chairwoman, said although the current board may seem homogenous, minority members are not afraid to speak out.

"I would prefer a more diverse board with more females and minorities than we have," she said. "That being said, we do have women and we do have African-Americans and they are not shy people."

Champ Mitchell, a new board member, said it is unusual to have so many new members at one time, and he expects the board to begin taking the initiative more often. "My experience with (the new members) is that these are people who want to roll up their sleeves and address these issues," he said.

Mitchell said one of the big issues is in-state undergraduate tuition, which he said is too high and the board should look in to reducing it.

Marty Kotis, another new board member, said the new members have a fresh perspective as many have business backgrounds.

But other university groups, including the North Carolina Vision Coalition, still want more direct communication with the board. The coalition was formed around concern about the lack of outside input during the creation of the five-year strategic plan, said Zach Bijesse, a member of the coalition at the time. The coalition wrote a petition to the board in April asking for additional seating and a public comment section at board meetings for system students and employees.

The system Association of Student Government's president, a nonvoting member of the board, represents students, said Joni Worthington, spokeswoman for the system.

Gage said the system hosts open meetings on campuses, but students are often unaware or don't pay attention to what is going on, and only contribute to important issues when they are winding down to a close.

"It's really hard because campuses were making various decision meetings that were important without (students)," she said.

Robert Nunnery, president of ASG, said the board has always been receptive to student opinion.

"Some board members even look to me because I am the only student on the board," Nunnery said.

Gage said the board's decisions while not always popular — have always been moderate.

"The reason the University is successful is that the sensible center is where we land ... in everything we have done," she said.

But Jackson said he believes the board is unbudgingly conservative. Whether it be gender-neutral housing, the tuition or athletics, the BOG will feel a backlash and it will not be good for the University as a whole," he said.

Brad Wilson, who served as chairman of the board from 2002-06, said students should hold their opinions because the new members on the board have only met once.

"Let's give everyone an opportunity to demonstrate how they are going to operate and not rush to any judgment," Wilson said.

Kotis said he thinks the new members will be more vocal.

"We're new, and we're wanting to learn a lot about the University, and we're asking questions and questioning why a lot of times – rather than just accepting things, we want to understand why," Kotis said.

Politicians step forward for Kinnaird's seat

Following Sen. Ellie Kinnaird's (D-Orange) resignation Monday, the N.C. Democratic Party must find a replacement for one of the most liberal voices in the state legislature.

Kinnaird, who has served 17 years in the N.C. Senate, had said that she wanted a woman to take her seat. And at least a few women are already considering stepping up.

An executive committee composed of Democratic officials from Orange and Chatham counties will select an appointee, who will be confirmed by Gov. Pat McCrory. That person would serve until December.

Alice Bordsen, a former representative from Alamance County who served in the N.C. House of Representatives for a decade, is entering the selection process for Kinnaird's vacated seat.

At Kinnaird's request, Bordsen sent a letter to the committee indicating her willingness to complete her longtime friend's term.

Bordsen decided not to run for re-election for 2013 because of her frustration with redistricting. She said she is able to take on the job.

'I have a deep involvement with Orange County and a longtime friendship with Sen.

Bordsen said that until the seat is filled, the constituent work will not be done.

"Her service will certainly be missed," she said. The N.C. Democratic Party Press Secretary Micah Beasley said the loss of a female senator would contribute to the lack of female representation in the N.C. legislature.

According to the National Conference of State Legislatures, about 23 percent of N.C. legislators are female.

"We certainly need more female voices (at every level of politics)," Beasley said. "Alice Bordsen would be a talented person to draw on if she chose to seek the appointment."

Rep. Valerie Foushee (D-Orange) told The Daily Tar Heel Monday that she might be interested in the position but has not made any final decisions.

Rep. Verla Insko, the other Democrat representing Orange County, has decided not to run for the position.

'I am very happy where I am," Insko said. "I have a lot of responsibility in the House as a senior member. I am committed to that, and that is where I belong."

Kinnaird resigned to work on voter rights issues after the legislature passed a bill to require a government-issued photo ID for voters.

'We are certainly sad to see her go, but it is such a commendable course of action,"

Sen. Ellie Kinnaird, D-Orange, resigned from the N.C. Senate after serving as Orange County's state senator for 17 years. The N.C. Democratic Party is searching for her replacement.

Beasley said. "It is critical to have leaders like Sen. Kinnaird willing to devote their time and energy to combatting these measures."

Beasley said the next senator must be prepared to take a firm stance against the policies that have come out of the Republican-led legislature.

We have to have someone who is a fighter for the middle class," he said. "We have to have someone stand up against this Republican legislature to fight for everything that built North Carolina and fight for the values that we stand for."

Attorney general sues local landlord

Student renters claim a local landlord withheld security deposits.

By Jenny Surane City Editor

The N.C. Attorney General's Office is suing a Chapel Hill landlord for failing to return security deposits to his student renters.

N.C. Attorney General Roy Cooper filed a lawsuit last month against James Ware Kelley III and his real estate investment firm Ware Investments, LLC after at least five UNC students sued Kelley and his business for "deceptive trade practices.

Kelley regularly "co-mingled" students' security deposits with personal operating funds, failed to return the deposits and would "contrive damage claims," according to the lawsuit. Under North Carolina law, a landlord must keep tenants' security deposits in a separate trust account.

Kelley said his failure to separate his tenants' security deposits from the rest of his operating funds was a mistake. He said the only time he didn't return his tenants' deposits was when he used them to pay for any damage the tenants made to his properties.

Noelle Talley, spokeswoman for the state attorney general's office, said her office has received complaints related to the case from as early as 2006.

Talley said at least a dozen students have contacted her office claiming to be victims of Kelley.

"I made an honest mistake and no money is missing," Kelley said.

Kelley said he used a mass-produced lease from 2007 that he found on a website for North Carolina realtors. That lease cited the incorrect statutes that define what bank accounts he was supposed to keep his money in, Kelley said.

In the suit, Cooper claims that when tenants challenged Kelley to return the security deposits, Kelley cited "supposed" damage claims as a reason to not refund the students' money.

Students seeking protection from landlords should visit Student Legal Services, said Dorothy Bernholz, director of UNC Student Legal Services and the attorney representing the five UNC students listed in the lawsuit. Bernholz said documentation is key to ensuring both landlords and tenants are treated fairly.

"We always advise them when they sign up for a premise to go through and do a very careful walkthrough inspection, take photographs of the condition," she said. "If there's a big hole in the living room when you move in and you can prove it, then that's not your responsibility when you move out."

Cooper seeks to return all of the outstanding security deposits to tenants, the lawsuit states. Cooper also asked the court to levy a $5,000 penalty against Kelley for each Tenant Security Deposit Act violation.

Kelley said the total penalties filed against him would amount to about $45,000.

Erin Hawley, who graduated from UNC in May, began renting an apartment on Isley Street from Kelley last August. After her lease ended in July, she and her two roommates expected to see their $1,410 security deposit returned to them in a timely manner.

Instead, Kelley deposited their security deposit into a regular checking account versus the mandated trust account, the lawsuit states.

"I am informed by former tenants of James Kelley that he has a reputation for withholding tenants' security deposits," Hawley said in her affidavit. "I am concerned about the security of my funds."

Hawley said Kelley still has time to return her security deposit, but she filed the affidavit with the attorney general's lawsuit just in case she had trouble getting her funds back.

"He still has time to get my security deposit back since my lease recently ended, but I decided to ask for legal advice based on hearsay," Hawley said.

'Mobile Mural' bus takes art to the streets

A Chapel Hill bus displays local installation art.

By Katie Hjerpe Staff Writer

One local artist expanded the color palette in a town that bleeds Carolina blue.

Mary Carter Taub created a piece of installation art on a Chapel Hill Transit bus. The "Mobile Mural" in an array of colorful, intersecting stripes was inspired by a map of Chapel Hill and Carrboro's bus routes.

"(The design) is then overlaid with my version of road mark patterns that you see on streets and highways, such as double yellow lines, dotted yellow lines and zebra stripes in pedestrian crosswalks," she said.

The piece is part of the Downtown Art Program, which is a Chapel Hill-wide effort to bring in local and public art to enhance and brighten the downtown environment.

When the project was proposed, possible canvases for this mural included bus shelters and parking lots. But the Downtown Art Program and Taub, who specializes in installation art, agreed that a bus was a great way to showcase artwork while integrating it into the community.

"Public art is very appealing to me because it is presented in the public arena, outside of the traditional museum and gallery network, allowing access to a broader audience," she said.

"A Chapel Hill Transit bus was the best option to reach a wide net of folks.

"It is very exciting to create a work that blends aesthetics with a practical or utilitarian need," she said.

Steve Wright, Chapel Hill's public art coordinator, who worked with Taub on the mural, said he finds her work to be a perfect example of art blended with the community.

"She creates entire environments – installations in storefronts, cafes, buses," he said. "She goes beyond the typical ideas of art as a painting on a wall or a sculpture."

Taub created the Mobile

Mural out of different colors of duct tape over a pencil sketch of the transit routes. She has constructed past installations out of other common materials, such as sticky notes.

"I enjoy responding to and shaping — space," she said.

"I especially like unconventional spaces as they provide interesting physical constraints."

Taub said she prefers community-based projects because they allow her to use both her left and right brain.

"It allows me to flex my business muscles and utilize my project management skills all under the umbrella of making art — the best of both worlds," she said.

The vinyl-wrapped bus, which Taub considers part of the "2.0 version" of her career as an installation artist, will be in service until February 2014

UNC students, such as sophomore Kelly Duffy, have already noticed the difference the bus makes in the campus surroundings.

"Everything in Chapel Hill is about the school and none of it is about art," Duffy said. "I think the bus is a great way to incorporate art into everyday life in Chapel Hill."

Mary Carter Taub's "Mobile Mural" on a Chapel Hill Transit bus is part of the Downtown Art Program.

Taub's goal is to continue pursuing public art projects with a greater community emphasis. She said her installations, in addition to giving art to community, give community to her.

"One perk to making public art is that I meet so many different types of people,"

she said. "I especially enjoy the casual conversations and spontaneous social interactions that arise during the public art process."

Recruitment up at 2013 FallFest

Clear skies brought thousands to the kickoff event.

By Janell Smith Staff Writer

Approximately 25,000 students strolled up and down South Road to take part in the University's biggest welcome-back event, enjoying free food and clear skies.

This year's FallFest, an annual Week of Welcome event that offers hundreds of clubs and organizations the chance to publicize their work and recruit new students, took place without a single drop of rain, despite a forecast that had organizers worried.

Last year, FallFest was cancelled due to rain, so this time around both freshmen and sophomores were able to experience the event for the director of student learning at the Student Union, said at any given time in the evening roughly 14,000 students could be found at the event.

Sacks said between $60,000 and $70,000 was spent on security, labor and production costs. She said the Student Union did not spend money on food or a considerable amount on vendors - all of the food provided was donated.

In 2011, the Student Union spent $54,000 on the event.

Karen Cunningham, director of marketing and special events at Campus Recreation, said student turnout this year was more than she anticipated.

"The campus rec had over 2,000 people join our listserv," Cunningham said. "Honestly, I was only expecting 1,200 students to join – a number which we far exceeded."

Cunningham said Campus Recreation was able to give away $7,000 in "swag" prizes. "Personally, it is one of my favorite events at the University," she said. "It's just so great to see new students at FallFest and to see the excitement it generates."

She said she thought the event was a huge success because the turnout not only benefitted new students, but clubs and vendors as well.

In response to last year's cancellation of FallFest, the organizing committee devised a backup plan that would move the event inside of Fetzer Hall gyms A and B in the event of rain.

Sacks said she was glad the backup plan wasn't put into action.

"While it would have been great to be able to give the opportunity (to attend FallFest) to student groups - rain or shine - (and) to tell others about co-curricular possibilities, the indoor nature of the event would have limited the scope, and the event is just such a great one to have outside," she said

Students looking to beat the back-to-school blues with a cold beer can also beat the lines at certain bars by downloading a new app.

TabSprint shortens the paying process at bars, which can be lengthy when the bar is full. The app allows bar guests to use smartphones to view menus and specials and to select drinks. To pay, customers present their order on their smartphone to the bartender, who can then close the tab with the touch of a finger.

The creators of the app, UNC alumnus John Chipouras and Duke alumnus Grant Warman, wanted to help customers bypass the lines at bars. And several local bars including Top of the Hill Restaurant and Brewery, Steel String Craft Brewery, The Standard Restaurant and Bar and The Library – are now using TabSprint. The app is also available at venues in Raleigh and Durham, and Chipouras and Warman are hoping to soon expand app availability to Charlotte.

faster," Chipouras said.

Each drink order is a separate credit card charge and includes a tip with each purchase. The default tip per order is $1, which can be increased or decreased by the user.

Andrew Scharfenberg, coowner of Steel String Craft Brewery, said the app makes serving guests easier on busy nights. Steel String has been using the app for more than two months. Scharfenberg said he uses the app when he visits his own bar and has heard bar guests describe it as intriguing and useful.

"Bartenders don't have to print the ticket, get it signed, keep up with it and later enter the tip - it takes that work away," Scharfenberg said.

The credit card number is preprogrammed into the user's phone so bar guests are spared the hassle that ensues when they forget their credit cards at the bar, Chipouras said. Some potential users might be uneasy about entering credit card information, Scharfenberg said. But TabSprint sends users a report the following morning with a list of the previous night's charges. Drink menus and specials are listed on the app, which can help guide bar-goers' night. Incentives are also offered for new users, such as a $5 credit. UNC junior Caroline Pittman had not previously heard of TabSprint but said she is eager to download it. "I can't count the number of times I've left my card at the bar, and this app would definitely prevent that from happening," Pittman said. "I'd love that to become popular in Chapel Hill."

attract enough members.

"It was difficult to recruit members because students weren't coming out and seeking us," Hayes said. "We had to find alternative ways to reach students."

But Hayes said the group was able to reach at least 140 students at FallFest. She said she was surprised at the number of juniors who joined their listserv.

"It's nice to see that even upperclassmen were interested in joining new organizations," Hayes said. "That's what is great about FallFest, everyone has the chance to explore and expand their interests."

After paying a fee to TabSprint, a bar is eligible to use the app.

Bartenders spend 60 percent of their time using the Point of Sale system, Chipouras said, adding that he hopes his app will help streamline business at bars – particularly on Thursday through Saturday nights when bars are especially busy.

KNOW YOUR newsroom

Another year brings a fresh crop of Daily Tar Heel editors. Use this page to see who they are, where they're from and what roles they fill. Also read below to see the editor-in-chief's goals for this year.

NICOLE COMPARATO EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

BOCA RATON, FLA. SENIOR JOURNALISM, POLITICAL SCIENCE

(919) 962-4086 EDITOR@DAILYTARHEEL.COM

Ultimately responsible for all print and online content; serves as the public face of the paper.

Making the Daily Tar Heel a leader among publications because, well, we should be

The DTH should not only be the place for you to get the news, but it should be the place to break news as well. It should also be entertaining and relevant to your lives.

We want the DTH to be the first thing you grab on your way to the bus, dailytarheel.com to be the first tab you click on in your browser and @dailytarheel to be the first Twitter page vou check for the latest news.

As the primary news outlet for UNC and Chapel Hill, we have a duty to deliver timely, balanced information. Because of our proximity to campus, we are in the best position to do so.

We should be held to the same standard as professional publications, if not a higher one, and will do our best to meet or exceed that.

Emphasizing electronic media in a time when it is absolutely necessary to do so

Too many times the DTH has dedicated itself to increasing its online and multimedia presence, but this year I promise you it will actually happen.

We have completely revamped our multimedia desk to consistently generate videos up to five times a week, and we are in the midst of a website redesign that will be finished this school vear, no excuses.

In the ever-changing world of media, The Daily Tar Heel needs to adapt to meet our audience's needs.

With a stronger emphasis on online-exclusive content and production that meets this generation's craving for new and improved, we can push the DTH to the level it needs to be at.

Recruiting and utilizing a staff that comes from everywhere, not just Carroll Hall

In order to put out the best paper possible, we need the best team we can get.

There are so many talented students at UNC that come from outside the journalism school and span across many different majors that are untapped and may not know about opportunities to work at the DTH.

I say come one, come all. Grad students, we want you here. Computer science majors, religious studies majors, biology majors, classics majors — there's no limit on the diverse perspectives we can recruit to work at our office on Rosemary Street.

It's great that many of us are pursuing a degree in journalism, but we also need to have a staff that represents the student body.

After months of delay, Carrboro's first hotel could open as soon as Friday.

"We're hoping to open either Friday or the following Monday," said Manish Atma, president of the hotel's manager Atma Hotel Group.

He said the Hampton Inn & Suites must pass a few more town and corporate inspections before it can open its doors.

Then it's just a matter of putting the final touches on the project, like decorating and cleaning the hotel, Atma said.

Chapel Hill to get Prius taxis

Raleigh-based Taxi Taxi plans to bring its hybrid Prius taxis to Chapel Hill and Carrboro sometime this year.

Laurie Paolicelli, executive director of the Orange County/Chapel Hill Visitors Bureau, said people in the community are excited about getting more eco-friendly transportation.

"It's the only provider we have where their whole fleet is hybrid," she said. "It definitely meets who we are as a sustainable community."

Fred Platt, the general manager for Taxi Taxi, said his company wants to provide customers with the best service possible, which includes ensuring their security.

Chris McCracken, who was general manager of Hot Dogs & Brew, said the concept did not work for the more-than-1,800-square-foot space.

He said the restaurant got a lot of business from students late at night, but it wasn't enough.

rant," he said. "That concept could be supported in a space a third of the size than we were occupying."

McCracken is also involved in the new restaurant. He said Hummus Cafe would attract diners at all times of the day because of its variety.

"We felt like it needed to be more of a concept that would cater to lunch, dinner and possibly late night, versus a one-dimensional product like hot dogs," he said.

McCracken said Hot Dogs & Brew could reopen as a food truck or in a smaller restaurant space in the future.

"If the person is a police officer or somebody that's been approved to carry the weapon to begin with, I would think they are a trustworthy person and they have it there with them for a reason."

Senior Myeshia Floyd said allowing guns in bars might get out of hand if people don't know how to limit themselves while drinking.

"I don't think it's a good idea, only because that opens Pandora's box and people can abuse it," she said.

guns in bars. "People do not make rational decisions when they're under the influence," he said. "They're not allowed to drive, so why should they be allowed to operate a firearm?" Ferry said he doesn't know what his policy will be.

"It doesn't pose as much of a problem for an establishment like this one."

Chris Carini, owner of Linda's Bar and Grill on Franklin Street, said people with permits aren't the problem.

"The person with a concealed-carry permit obviously has gone through the ringer to get it," he said.

"But what if somebody gets it from them? If there's a fight, there's a tussle and their gun gets taken from them – from somebody who is trained and authorized to somebody who is not."

Carini, who said he won't allow people to bring guns into his bar, said the changes to the law will probably increase the number of people who bring their guns to bars statewide, but not necessarily in Chapel Hill.

"I don't think Chapel Hill is a good place to really say anything like that because it's not like a huge gun (owner) population," Carini said.

The Pasquotank County Board of Elections also voted to stop an Elizabeth City State University senior from running for city council because his on-campus address

"This board is nonpartisan, and that's what we strive to be," Knight said.

Please don't stop and frisk me lthough it may not be a direct form, New York's stop-and-frisk law is a form of racial profiling by unfairly targeting the city's men of color.

In New York City, the New York Police Department's stop-and-frisk policies allow for officers to stop thousands of law-abiding citizens every year under the pretense of reasonable suspicion, with the majority of these residents being either black or Latino.

According to 2012 NYPD reports, New York residents were stopped by the police 532,911 times. In those cases, 473,644 were completely innocent. Fifty-five percent of the innocent residents were black and 32 percent were Latino.

The data also showed that nine out of 10 New Yorkers who were stopped were completely innocent.

Although the reasoning for the stop-and-frisk policy is being attributed to crime being committed in low-income areas, there is no doubt that stopping thousands of lawabiding citizens is not a reasonable policy for lowering crime rates.

The stop-and-frisk law was challenged in a federal class action lawsuit, Floyd et al. v. City of New York et al . In it, a number of plaintiffs claimed that the city, along with numerous defendants, was unconstitutionally stopping and frisking people of color. Last week, federal judge Shira Scheindlin ruled that the NYPD was liable for a pattern of racial profiling and that the stop-and-frisks were unconstitutional. However, New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg has publicly indicated that the city would possibly appeal the ruling. The law is completely unjust. Regardless of low income, high crime or any reasoning that is cited, it is a violation of the 14th Amendment to single out particular groups of people on the basis of race. The stop-and-frisk policy in New York does just that. A policy like this makes the assumption that those that live in low-income areas are more likely to commit crimes. The controversy in New York is in many ways similar to a local lawsuit in North Carolina. In Alamance County, the U.S. Justice Department ruled that Latinos were unfairly targeted as a part of the sheriff's office's search for illegal immigrants.

EDITORIAL Shutting students out

The BOG should start listening to activist voices.

he recent reversal of gender-neutral housing by the UNC Board of Governors was a blow not only to Carolina's LGBTQ community but an insult to the entire student body.

By meeting over the summer, when few students remain in town, the BOG went behind the backs of the student activists who fought for gender-neutral housing and stifled their voices in coming to the final decision.

This was a cruel misuse of the board's power and a disrespectful way to treat student activism, regardless of the BOG's final decision.

Last fall, students had the opportunity to give presentations and hold discussions concerning their reasons for supporting gender-neutral housing.

This inclusion of student voices led to the unanimous approval of the housing plan - butthe BOG didn't seek out student voices this summer, or take part in discussions with students last fall.

The reversal of the decision so soon before the beginning of the fall semester left four students who had planned to live in gender-neutral housing scrambling to find other accommodations. They have now been placed in on- or off-campus housing. The BOG went completely against what students want and need for their comfort on campus — it's hard to perform well in school when your housing situation causes stress and discomfort.

Next time, those passing legislation that affects students should have the decency to include those that are directly affected in the discussion.

The Board of Governors should understand that students aren't going to stop fighting for their safety. They will always be ready to sit down and have a serious, candid conversation.

NC needs to draw focus from TFA

TO THE EDITOR:

As a future educator. the article about the state budget favoring Teach For America left me with a lot to say.

Even though the Teach for America program provides bodies in the classroom, I think it undermines the teaching profession.

The Teach for America recipients spend six weeks in the summer trying to learn what we education students learn in over two years.

In addition, they are put in some of the worst schools in the state with very little training or support.

It sends the message that going to a university to get a teaching degree is pointless

The teaching profession is already looked down upon, and this only devalues it more.

By supporting Teach for America instead of programs like Teaching Fellows, the North Carolina General Assembly is saying that they are looking for a short-term fix to North Carolina's educational system instead of long-term, which is what the state really needs.

North Carolina is ranked 46th in the nation for percapita spending on public schools and 48th in the nation for teacher pay.

by members of his studentled task force in the spring. However, I find the DTH's claim that any individual can adequately represent the interests and experiences of the University's entire student body dangerous, not to mention dishonest.

Christy Lambden deserves to be rewarded for his great work, but representation of the general student body on this particular task force is less important than survivor representation.

After all, people have filed high-profile lawsuits against this University for representing the interests of students who perpetrate sexual assault at the expense of those who survive sexual assault.

Finally, advocacy is work that everyone should do. Advocacy requires patient listening, vision and endless self-critique, but leads to real changes in behavior, attitude and policy.

In short, although Christy Lambden may not be able to bring your perspective to every appropriate situation, you can definitely emulate the good things he has done so far during his term.

TO THE EDITOR: An amendment proposed by Rep. Amash (R-Mich.) in the House of Representatives was recently defeated by a narrow margin, 205-217.

The Daily Tar Heel

As much progress as we have made as a nation in the past 151 years, it is evident that we do not live in a post-racial society.

I would love to think that policies like the stop-and-frisk law have nothing to do with race, but the statistics alone show otherwise. When or if the day comes that race is not a factor, a law like this could be justifiably upheld .

In the meantime, this should not happen and citizens should continue to question the law enforcement and government on how and why these policies are effective.

Hopefully Mayor Bloomberg and the city of New York soon recognize that these discriminatory tactics violate one's civil rights.

Voter ID law restricts rights of students.

I ollowing the successful ousting of proposed voter registration laws this spring, UNC-system students will now face another new challenge by way of vote registration picture identification forms.

The new forms attack the voting abilities of students.

The bill, signed into law last week, requires a state-approved photo ID to vote in a polling place and shortens the available time for early voting. The new law is reportedly intended to suppress voter fraud.

This comes shortly after a controversial Supreme Court decision to do away with the provision of the 1965 Voting Rights Act which previously required states to obtain federal approval before amending their voting laws.

Regardless of residency, all students were previously able to register as N.C. voters.

The previous law allowed out-of-state students to choose between voting as a resident of their home state or North Carolina. In order to do this now, out-of-state students must obtain a valid photo ID from the state.

Unfortunately, the UNC OneCard is not on the list of N.C.-approved photo identification.

Local disaster relief

Disaster relief plan exemplifies leadership.

fter a summer that saw torrential rains devastate parts of North Carolina, Gov. Pat McCrory, along with the American Red Cross, has made it a priority to help the community through disaster relief.

Gov. McCrory issued a disaster declaration in order to aid victims, who failed to qualify for federal loans from the Small Business Administration.

Dependent on individual financial situations, affected homeowners could be eligible for 30-year loans of up to $200,000 to repair or replace damaged buildings, and up to $40,000 for ruined clothing, appliances and other personal property.

Similarly, affected businesses and nonprofit organizations can apply for up to $2 million in loans.

These benefits that the Chapel Hill and Carborro community will receive will far exceed the dollar amount.

McCrory has made it the government's primary concern to do everything that it can to ease the pain of victims, while also compensating for the destruction of people's lives as best it can.

In addition to Gov. McCrory's efforts, Stan

The new law makes the process of voting in Chapel Hill as an out-ofstate student significantly more difficult.

Though not as severe as the attempted attack earlier this spring on N.C. voting rights, this legislation still diminishes the voting leverage of North Carolinian universities.

Such universities have provided markedly liberal voting bases in a Republican-controlled state for some time.

At a time when states have only recently recovered the ability to adjust voting laws, this biased law places North Carolina at the forefront of reasons why the Supreme Court was wrong.

University needs more than Lambden

TO THE EDITOR:

Although I am glad that Christy Lambden is receiving due applause for his tireless and hopefully effective efforts as student body president, I object to the DTH's uncritical treatment of this summer's Sexual Assault Task Force in recent days.

It is important to keep in mind that the task force was called not merely for the University's "mishandling" of several sexual assault cases but the University's repeated mistreatment of sexual assault survivors.

Lambden has done an estimable job of keeping in mind the concerns raised

Of the representative from North Carolina, only four voted in its favor.

If passed, the amendment would have denied funding for the National Security Agency's blanket collection of the phone records from everyone in the United States, restricting its reach only to those records that pertain to persons under active investigation.

The defeat of this amendment should be of concern to all.

The federal government's collection of information on every single American's activity, without regard for the establishment of probable cause, is a violation of our individual rights, in blatant disregard of the Fourth Amendment. The general warrants of King George III were nothing compared to what our own government is perpetrating every day upon its own citizens.

Despite the defeat of this specific piece of legislation, it is not too late to voice your concern.

Call, write or meet with your representative and senators during their August recess.

Urge them to oppose the ongoing surveillance of millions of innocent citizens and residents.
