Harry Baals gets no love from city

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

Life is tough with a name like Harry Baals. The man served four terms as mayor of Fort Wayne, Ind., from the 1930s to 1950s, and is the runaway favorite in an online poll to choose the name-sake of a government center.

But town officials say it's unlikely they'll name the building after him because of his snicker-inducing name.

"We realize that while Harry Baals was a respected mayor, not everyone outside of Fort Wayne will know that," deputy mayor Beth Malloy said.

The former mayor pronounced his surname "balls," although his descendents have since changed it to "bales."

NOTED. A Chicago chocolatier has debuted a line of beer marshmallows to add to its "super bowl" collection of sweets.

Each marshmallow is made from scratch by founder and owner Nicole Greene, then dipped in milk chocolate and topped with pieces of crunchy, sweet-and-salty brittle made from pretzels and beer.

Four marshmallows sell for $10.

QUOTED. "Nothing says forever like a cockroach."

— Jim Breheny, director of the Bronx Zoo, on the zoo's offer to name a giant Madagascar hissing cockroach after one's lover in the spirit of Valentine's Day.

The rights to name one of the zoo's 58,000 roaches is $10, with proceeds going to a wildlife preservation fund.
