

New Emojis? About time, iOS

From staff and wire reports

Soon, 250 new Emojis will be added to the already extensive yet also limiting repertoire of abstract tiny images. So that one time you needed an Emoji to aptly portray that girl who caught you creeping on her Facebook in class: this could be your big break. The middle finger, vomiting queasy face and racially diverse selection have been lacking for quite a while now. Seriously, where's a fingers-crossed icon for those mornings you wake up and don't quite remember who could be next to you? And don't get us started on the animal kingdom. We would love to know the reasoning behind having multiple camels (one hump or two!) but no fox, spider or giraffe. Coders need to get on this immediately. Our generation can barely interact socially as is.

NOTED. Warmer climates have caused jellyfish populations to spike in most of the world's coastal ecosystems and seas. This jellypocalypse could bring Irukandji our way, a type of box jellyfish family that apparently causes horrible pain, cramps, nausea, vomiting and the feeling of existential dread. CAN'T WAIT.

QUOTED. "You don't want to touch it. You don't want to go towards it." — An animal control official commenting on your nasty ex-boyfriend. Just kidding, apparently there's a 20-foot-long boa constrictor in Lake Hopatcong, New Jersey's biggest lake. Worst part of the whole ordeal? We bet it's a Dook fan.
