Punch drunk, no love

From staff and wire reports

Even self injury couldn't get Daniel Vagnini out of a DUI. Police said that after a night of drinking in Hartford, Conn., Vagnini ran into the woods, punched himself in the face, tore his shirt and chucked his keys and wallet into a river.

He then attempted to use his battered condition to convince police that he had not been driving when an officer saw his car speed through a stop sign and almost crash into another vehicle, police said.

But Vagnini's story that he had been assaulted while leaving a bar before he blacked out and awoke in the woods didn't hold true for police.

Police charged Vagnini with evading responsibility on top of reckless driving and driving under the influence.

NOTED. Alois Mabhunu, a homicide detective in Zimbabwe, has been in a police detention barracks for a month after using a toilet reserved for President Robert Mugabe at a trade fair.

Mabhunu, who is appealing his 10-day jail sentence, has been demoted and will no longer be allowed to wear plain clothes.

QUOTED. "I am probably one of the few attorneys who knows what it feels like to be accused and in need of help."

— Reema Bajaj, an attorney who was accused of prostitution. Bajaj, 25, has three charges pending against her, one of which is a class 4 felony because the act was reportedly carried out within 1,000 feet of a school.
