Spear hunter raises atlatl awareness

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

A Montana man has offered his governor a spear-hunting demonstration to show his support for a bill which would permit the practice.

Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer labeled the bill “frivolous” last week, but Bob Perkins, or “Atlatl Bob,” as he is known, said the governor might not know how effective hunting with a spear is.

Perkins once killed a bison with an atlatl, a prehistoric tool that gives hunters leverage when throwing spears.

The spear-hunting bill, proposed by a Republican state senator, has drawn criticism from liberal Montanans. One local blogger has dubbed the bill the “Stone Age Hunting Act of 2011.”

NOTED. Two 30-year-old men were injured in a street fight involving a samurai sword this weekend in Glasgow, Scotland.

Following the six-man attack, police said they found “a number of offensive weapons,” including the samurai sword and golf clubs.

The two injured participants were treated for face lacerations and head injuries, which were said not to be life threatening.

QUOTED. “It just makes you realize these stories are more than stories. They’re about real lives.”

— Historian Nathaniel Philbrick, after marine archaeologists found the sunken whaling ship belonging to Captain George Pollard, who inspired the novel “Moby Dick.”

Pollard’s ship hit a coral reef and sank in 1823. His previous ship was rammed by a whale.
