Women's lacrosse team falls to Syracuse

Sports

The Tar Heels' season was ended with a goal in the last five seconds.

By Brooke Pryor Staff Writer

In a pregame interview, junior midfielder Kara Cannizzaro said the No. 5 seeded North Carolina women's lacrosse team expected to play in an evenly matched game against No. 4 seeded Syracuse. They knew it would come down to a couple of goals.

As time ran down, Cannizzaro's prediction rang

Syracuse senior Michelle Tumolo sent the ball past senior goalie Lauren Maksym with five seconds remaining to snatch the victory out of UNC's outstretched hand.

With the loss, UNC won't advance to the Final Four for the first time in four years.

There were a lot of wouldacoulda-shoulda moments that might have changed the outcome," coach Jenny Levy said. "Today's game easily could have been a national semifinal or final game. The quality of play was very high on both sides.

After building on momentum in the second half, UNC used an 8-3 scoring run to gain a 15-12 lead with under nine minutes left to play. In the remaining time, Syracuse used draw controls and frantic offense to regain the momentum

In the final two and a half minutes, the Orange scored three goals, including two from Tumolo. A finalist for the Tewaaraton Award, the nation's top lacrosse honor, Tumolo had four goals on the night including the lastsecond game winner.

"I thought both teams played with a lot of heart and a lot of hustle," Cannizzaro said. "It seemed like some of the bounces went right into their sticks late in the game."

The second half surge of scoring by the Orange was not the first time UNC was faced with a deluge of Syracuse goals. The Orange began the game on a 4-0 run all in the first five minutes.

But Levy put a stop to the Syracuse scoring free-for-all by quickly calling a timeout. After regrouping, UNC outscored Syracuse 7-3 in the remainder of the half.

In the second half momentum swung like a pendulum, with each team taking on opportunities for a stretch of time before it swung back to the opponent.

Senior Laura Zimmerman and Cannizzaro both capitalized on the momentum with career days. Playing in front of her hometown, Zimmerman scored a career-high six goals and matched her career high of seven points. Cannizzaro's five goals also tied her career high.

"It was nice to come home but it would've been nicer to win," Zimmerman said. "In the second half, we came out a little slow. I thought we gained some momentum through the ground balls and draw controls. We were landing out shots pretty well during our run in the second half." While Zimmerman and Cannizzaro frequently found the back of the net, the Orange shut down leading scorer Abbey Friend and senior midfielder Becky Lynch. Lynch is also one of the five finalists for the Tewaaraton Award, but didn't see much of the ball as a result of Syracuse's tight defense.

"We could have taken care of business a little better early in the game instead of falling behind like we did," Cannizzaro said. "You can't let it come down to the last two minutes like we

Tar Heels stumble in Sweet 16 weekend

Both UNC tennis teams ended their dual seasons in Athens, Ga.

By Andrew Romaine Staff Writer

The dual-match season ended for the North Carolina men's and women's tennis teams last week in the NCAA Tournament round of 16 held in Athens, Ga.

But the end is just the beginning for a few Tar Heels. The 15th-seeded men lost 4-0 to No. 2 Georgia and the No. 7 women fell 4-2 to No. 10 Miami. "We had a great run and I'm very proud of our team," men's coach Sam Paul said. "We played a great match against Tennessee and we played one of our most solid matches of the year against College of Charleston. "But I don't think we're ever happy when we lose, and we definitely did not play our best match (against Georgia)." Georgia's home-court advantage and stellar play proved to be too much for the Tar Heels. "Their coach said to us, 'That's the best match we've played all year," Paul recalled. "We didn't have a great day, but I think the crowd may have affected some of the kids' performances." While the men faced a large pro-Georgia crowd, the women battled the weather and injuries.

A foot injury kept Lauren McHale out of singles play, and rain delayed the start of the match, forcing the Tar Heels to play until 1:30 a.m.

"We got off to a really good start in doubles, but unfortunately we were just so excited and so motivated that we weren't able to sustain it," coach Brian Kalbas said. "I think if we started on time, things would have been a little bit different, but you can't control that."

Freshman Caroline Price and sophomore Tessa Lyons both won singles matches, but stars Zoe de Bruycker and Shinann Featherston struggled.

"Miami played with a lot of emotion and a lot of intensity," Kalbas said.

'This time around, they competed extremely well and you could tell that they were very motivated to beat us."

Lauren McHale won her doubles match with partner Shinann Featherston against Miami but missed her singles match with an injury.

Several Tar Heels will compete in the NCAA individual championships. Jose Hernandez, and de Bruycker and McHale from the women's team start the NCAA singles tournament Wednesday.

Hernandez and Joey Burkhardt, along with Featherston and McHale, will compete in the doubles tournament starting Thursday.

"I think we're ready, and I think we're really excited just to get back on the court," Featherston said. "We've trained really hard, and we're really happy to be in the NCAA Tournament."

National title is on the line

The women's golf team is playing in the NCAA Championships.

By Brandon Moree Sports Editor

After a seventh-place finish in the NCAA regionals on May 12, the North Carolina women's golf team earned a spot in this week's NCAA Championships.

The Tar Heels were lead by senior Catherine O'Donnell as she became the third regional champion in program history and the first since 2004. Her total score of seven-under par gave O'Donnell her second tournament win of the season and third of her career.

"Catherine played really solid golf at regionals," coach Jan Mann said. "She struck the ball well and she's just a smart player. She's a very patient player, she knows when to take her chances and when not to."

O'Donnell was two-over at the turn in her final round at the regionals but strung together a handful of birdies on the back side to finish at two-under on the

"I was playing with a girl and we were neck-and-neck the whole day." O'Donnell said. "I knew that I was playing well and striking the ball well and putting well. So, I knew there were birdies out there on the back nine, and I tried to put myself in good position to make birdies and I did and I made the putts so it all worked out."

That performance puts momentum on the Tar Heels' side as they contend for a national title this week at the Vanderbilt Legends Club in Franklin, Tenn. But that's not all they have going for them.

The Tar Heels are very comfortable with the 6,377-yard, par 72 track as they have seen the course a couple of different times in the past two seasons.

"I feel actually really good (about this course)," O'Donnell said about the Tom Kite and Bob Cupp designed course.

"I think we've played ten (rounds) on the course. I think it gives us an advantage because we know where to hit it we know where to miss it to get up and down for par."

The four-day event runs from Tuesday to Friday, and that makes for a long week for golfers who are used to playing in three-day tournaments. The Tar Heels finished day one in fourth place lead by O'Donnell, who was tied for third at four-under par.

"It's a long week for them," Mann said. "So one of the most important things is for them to just be very patient throughout the week. You're not going to lose this tournament by being patient."

Last season the Tar Heels finished tied eighth in the NCAA Championships in College Station, Texas, with Katherine Perry finishing as the lowest Tar Heel in T-24th place. But this season, Mann believes her team is striking the ball well at this most critical time of the year — especially O'Donnell.

"She's a great competitor," Mann said. "When shes striking the ball as well as she is she always has a shot at coming out on top."
