Suspected Taliban commander dies after exercising in prison camp

MIAMI (MCT) — A 48-year-old suspected Taliban base commander dropped dead of an apparent heart attack after exercising on an elliptical machine inside Guantanamo's most populous prison camp, the military said Thursday.

The dead man, Awal Gul, had been held at the prison camps in southeast Cuba since October 2002.

Gul was working out Tuesday night in a collective cellblock at the cement penitentiary-style building called Camp 6, said Navy Cmdr. Tamsen Reese, a prison camps spokeswoman.

"He went to go take a shower and apparently collapsed in the shower," Reese said. "Detainees on cellblock then assisted him in getting to the guard station."

From there he was taken to a prison camp clinic, then to the Navy base hospital some miles away, but he could not be saved despite what the commander called "extensive life saving measures."

Gul is the seventh war-on-terror detainee to die during the nine years the Pentagon has confined some 800 men and boys to the prisons at Guantanamo. The detainee census was 173 on Thursday, including Gul.

The military says five of the men committed suicide in the camps — one in a psychiatric clinic — and a sixth died of colon cancer.

Gul had never been charged with a crime during his more-than-eight-year detention as a suspected base commander for the Taliban. The Atlanta-based federal public defender was helping him sue the Obama administration for his release in the U.S. District Court in Washington, D.C.

An announcement by the Southern Command in Miami called Gul "an admitted Taliban recruiter and commander of a military base in Jalalabad," who at one point allegedly operated an al-Qaida guesthouse.

Gul also admitted to meeting with Osama Bin Laden and providing him with operational assistance on several occasions, Southcom said.

"What role did the Muslim Brotherhood play in this film?" he asked.

"I think they blew up the mosque," said Rick Ingram, a candidate.

This and many more candidates' attempts at humor were followed by dead silence from the audience.

Following the film questions, candidate Mary Cooper was asked to explain the definition of love, which she defined as Reese's Peanut Butter Cups.

Brooklyn Stephens didn't have it any easier.

Morgan then asked about Will Smith's favorite color in the film.

"Well, it looks like he had an interracial thing going on," she said, regarding on-screen relations between Will Smith and Salma Hayek.

The candidates then had piggy-back races with a campaign manager, in sets of two.

Mirroring the jabs that have been present in more serious aspects of the race, they raced up and down the steps of the lecture hall while grabbing and kicking at their competitors. Cooper and Ingram won their respective races.

The final decision of the endorsement came down to a duel.

After accruing enough arbitrary points out of a combination of sideways, negative and positive awards — and audience "yee-haws" — the last two candidates remaining were Lee and Ingram.

The two candidates stood back against back, took 10 steps away from each other and began to fire.

Lee was met by an onslaught of foam Nerf darts and Ingram was declared the night's victor, winning the hotly contested endorsement.

The council approved the expansion despite the County giving less money to the project than council members thought fair.

University Mall was planned to house the library during construction. Those plans were put on hold at a Nov. 22 Chapel Hill Town Council meeting after Madison Marquette, the company that owns the mall, offered to house the library permanently.

"It's been a roller coaster year for the library," council member Penny Rich said.

Sustainability

Chapel Hill sponsored several sustainability efforts in the past year for housing, transportation and more.

Fifteen percent of Chapel Hill's buses are hybrids that save $6,000 in fuel costs annually, and the town received federal funds to subsidize green improvements to homes.
