A landfill's June closure has governments calculating costs.

Volume 121, Issue 13

By Gayatri Surendranathan Senior Writer

Within the next few weeks, Chapel Hill's solid waste will no longer be in Rogers Road's backyard.

As the June closure of the Orange County Landfill approaches, the town is preparing to ship its waste to the Durham Waste Industries transfer station.

But the transition will come at a cost almost $700,000 more annually.

The landfill was built in the historically black and low-income Rogers Road neighborhood in 1972 with the promise that it would close after 10 years.

Now, after decades of complaints from Rogers Road residents about the negative effects of the landfill, local officials are taking the next, temporary step toward a solid waste solution.

A Chapel Hill transfer station?

Chapel Hill already spends $3.5 million annually on collecting and disposing garbage.

The extra $700,000 cost would go toward buying new, better trucks and the cost of gas, as the Durham Waste Industries transfer station is further away than the Rogers Road landfill for most of the town

Chapel Hill Town Council member Jim Ward said the extra cost would likely be shouldered by taxpayers.

"We don't know yet if the extra money is available in the existing budget or if it will require a tax increase," Ward said. "We're currently in the process of doing research to sort out those issues."

Both Ward and Chapel Hill Town Council member Lee Storrow emphasized the temporary nature of the plan.

This will be what we do for the next three or four years as we decide what the best option is moving forward," Storrow said.

He said the town is considering collaborating with Carrboro to build a transfer station in Chapel Hill.

According to consultants' estimates, a Chapel Hill-Carrboro transfer station would cost about $2.8 million to build. "There's community interest in that plan, and a few months ago council members visited a transfer station in Asheboro because they produce about the same amount of waste that we do," Storrow said.

No. 8 UNC will take on No. 9 Villanova in game one of the NCAA Tournament.

The North Carolina men's basketball team might have let its third straight ACC Tournament championship game slip through its fingers Sunday, but the Tar Heels didn't have time to sulk at the Greensboro Coliseum. They had the next step in mind.

The team rushed back to Chapel Hill following the 87-77 loss and made it to coach Roy Williams house in time to watch the NCAA Tournament selection show, during which it learned of UNC's No. 8 seed in the South region.

"I don't mind telling you, I was stunned," Williams said about his reaction Tuesday. "When I saw the North Carolina in the number eight, I was stunned. Then it took me a couple seconds to say, 'Hey, that's us. That's not somebody else, that's us.'

The seed, which is tied for North Carolina's lowest ever, means the Tar Heels (24-10) will open tournament play Friday in Kansas City, Mo., against ninth-

Student Body President Will Leimenstoll vetoed Tuesday a controversial bill about ammunition funding, saying it was passed without substantial debate.

The bill, which was passed 17-16 in Student Congress earlier this month, would have made it more difficult for student organizations to receive money for ammunition. Members of the Tar Heel Rifle and Pistol Club said the bill unfairly targeted their organization.

Leimenstoll said the bill was voted on prematurely after a motion was granted to vote without debate — denying attendees the opportunity to voice their opinions.

"My reason was not because I think that student fees should go toward ammunition," he said. "I decided to veto because I didn't feel that everyone who wanted to have a say in the matter had the opportunity to have their voice heard."

Leimenstoll said members of the Tar Heel Rifle and Pistol Club, as well as people be no discussion before the vote

Austin Root, author and sponsor of the bill, said he doesn't think the two-thirds majority to override the veto will be reached.

But he said he is planning to file a motion at next Tuesday's meeting to reconsider the bill. If approved, the bill would be presented again at that meeting, and discussion would be allowed.

Root, along with several other members of Student Congress, has filed two related complaints with Student Congress' ethics committee against Speaker Pro Tempore Connor Brady. The complaints were discussed at the committee's meeting Tuesday night.

One complaint claimed that Brady, who was presiding at the meeting when the bill was passed, mishandled the procedure of the meeting by allowing a majority vote, instead of the required two-thirds vote, to end debate on the bill, Root said.

But Brady said neither he nor the 35 representatives in the room, including Root and the parliamentarian, knew that he was acting improperly at the time.

"Rep. Root felt that he could tarnish my reputation and try to save a bill that he knew would be vetoed," Brady said.

"Ultimately I think it's trumped-up charges that I look forward to defending myself on," he said before the meeting.

The complaint was dismissed at the ethics committee meeting Tuesday.

Root said the second complaint regards a private conversation that he and Brady had on Facebook in October.

He said Brady shared that discussion with persons outside of the conversation, and

Alumnus to lead probe in Russia

A UNC graduate was selected to investigate possible plagiarism.

By Kendra Benner Staff Writer

A UNC graduate will help lead a plagiarism investigation in his native Russia that could target top officials — including President Vladimir Putin.

Soviet Union fell in the 1990s, said Donald Raleigh, a UNC professor of Russian history. The probe is the first of its kind in Russian history, Raleigh said.

In Russia, Ph.D. candidates often pay ghost writers to complete their dissertations or copy previously published work, and Russian public officials largely ignore the practice, Raleigh said.

Fedyukin came to UNC in the late 1990s and earned his Ph.D. in history in 2009. He could not be reached for comment.

When Fedyukin graduated and returned to Russia, he sought to share new ideas from the U.S. with his colleagues and encourage higher standards in Russian academia, said Jay Smith, a UNC history professor who helped review Fedyukin's dissertation along with Raleigh.

"I think that, like many people who study abroad, Igor saw himself as someone who could bridge two worlds," he said. "The idea was that he would put his American Ph.D. to use in Russia and help reform the country."

Before Medvedev announced the investigation, Fedyukin and other academics had conducted a review of dissertations at a Moscow university, Raleigh said.

They found numerous instances of plagiarism, illuminating the size of the problem, he said.

"What's behind what Igor is doing is really to improve Russia's academic standing," Raleigh said. "That's his job, to shake things up, to make things better."

The academic probe raises the question of whether Putin will be formally accused of plagiarism.

A 2006 Brookings Institution report found that more than 16 pages of Putin's dissertation were copied from a Russian translation of an American business textbook - but it remains to be seen whether the investigation will implicate Putin.

"It's a common pattern in Russian political culture to announce campaigns against corruption, but the problem is so deeply rooted with high-level officials that are involved, and there are low-level scapegoats who feel the brunt of the campaign," said Jeff Jones, an associate history professor at UNC-Greensboro who also helped review Fedyukin's dissertation.

Regardless of who is targeted, those who know Fedyukin said he will likely use the talents he cultivated at UNC to continue to cause a stir in Russian academia.

"He's likely to get some political pushback," Smith said. "But he's articulate, he's strong-willed - he'll survive the turmoil."

GOP aims to improve inclusivity

The party's national committee wants to make changes to appeal to more voters.

By Meredith Burns Staff Writer

The Republican Party is feeling pressure after its national committee released a critical self-analysis of November's election losses Monday — and UNC's con-servative leaders support the modifications, which aim to broaden the party's appeal.

The report's authors found the party to be perceived as largely out of touch with the public and called for a more modern message for the party in federal elections.

"It pretty much says we need to be a more open and inclusive party," said Peter McClelland, who was elected chairman of the UNC College Republicans Monday.

The party needs to include more voters who share the same values of fiscal conservatism and limited government, but might have different stances on social issues, foreign policy and immigration, he said.

"They need to have that spot at the table. Even if the whole party does not shift, they need to have a spot at the table," McClelland said. "We need to play on the similarities we do have with others instead of saying, 'We're different, we're not going to change, and we're not going to let you in because of that."

One focus of the report is the youth vote. Last year, Republican presidential candidate Mitt Romney lost voters younger than 30 by 5 million votes.

Lauren Friedmann, a math and economics double major, said she sees a gap between the Republican Party and her college peers, especially with social issues like gay marriage and access to contraception.

"There seems to be a great disconnect between their current beliefs and messages, and what we've been feeling and pushing for," she said.

One way to persuade more people to vote Republican - especially youth - is for the party to embrace the libertarian ideals of protecting civil liberties and maintaining free markets, said Everett Lozzi, a senior and state chairman of Young Americans for Liberty.

Steven Greene, political science professor at N.C. State University, said he thinks reaching out to more groups is a smart move for the party.

"They are going to be the ones who move into positions of political power," he said. "They need to bring more voters in and convince everyone they're not just the party of angry, old, white men."

Peter Vogel, president of the UNC Young Democrats, said that, though the report lacks calls for substantive policy changes, the party should broaden its scope.

"It's good for the country when both parties compete for these voting blocks because electoral competition ensures that each party will tailor their polices to win votes," Vogel said.

Greene said the Republican message will take time to change and will only come when the party's survival is threatened.

"Reports don't change things — elections do."

More seniors contribute to gift

The class of 2013 may set a fundraising milestone.

By Mary Frances Buoyer Staff Writer

The class of 2013 is on the right track to overcome its predecessor's fundraising shortcomings, senior class organizers said. Simon Scholl, chairman of the senior campaign, said this year's campaign is on track to meet the goal set by the class of 2011 — which had the highest ever participation of students donating — heading into today's Commencement Information Day.

The class of 2012 fell short of its goal of 48 percent.

This year's senior campaign has exceeded last year's participation, with 17 percent of seniors contributing to the senior class gift so far, in comparison with last year's 11 percent at this time.

Campaign leaders have made their goal 48 percent participation with an average gift of $20.13.

"I am confident that we'll meet the 48 percent goal and hope we can even be the first class to break 50 percent participation," Scholl said.

Senior Class President Tim Palmer said he is hoping to make the event a milestone in fundraising for the senior class gift.

"All of our senior marshals will be present collecting gifts to the campaign and we are hoping a large number of seniors will decide to donate," he said.

Scholl said his team hopes to finish up the month similar to the class of 2011, which went into April with 25 percent participation.

He said once they reach 25 percent, they only need 800 more seniors to participate to meet their goal.

Senior Class Vice President Nora Chan said she believes the success of the campaign is attributed to an increase in fundraising events.

"These events have served as benchmarks for our fundraising," she said.

Scholl said the most successful event was "Beat Duke Week."

The campaign established a competition with Duke to see which senior class could capture the highest percentage of students giving to the campaign before the second basketball game against Duke.

"We found the event to be very successful and we collected a little over 200 gifts in four collection days in the Pit," Scholl said.

Scholl said campaign leaders are not discouraged by the campaign's shortcomings of 2012.

Palmer said this year's goal was set high to encourage a culture of giving back among seniors.

"I think it's important to give because UNC's continued success benefits every graduate, and Carolina's standing is a reflection on all Tar Heels," he said.

Artist, activist to give spoken-word performance

By McKenzie Coey Staff Writer

Visual artist, musician and poet Charlotte O'Neal, also known as "Mama C," will perform a spoken-word and music performance today, channeling memories of the time she spent on two continents as a human rights activist.

The performer left her hometown of Kansas City for Tanzania at age 19, after her husband, Pete O'Neal, was exiled because of his role in the city's Black Panther Party.

'Brother Pete's exile could have been something of a hell for both him and us but it turned into a blessing," she said, reflecting on her home in Tanzania.

She refers to everyone as brother or sister - a sign of respect and equality.

Mama C was also a member of Kansas City's Black Panther Party in the late 1960s and early 1970s before she and her husband left for Tanzania.

She has since been committed to social issues, said Joanne Hershfield, chairwoman of UNC's women's and gender studies department.

Hershfield directed and produced a documentary called "Mama C: Urban Warrior in the African Bush."

ATTEND THE PERFORMANCE

Time: 4 p.m. today

Location: Ackland Art Museum

Info: http://bit.ly/Xov0pM

Hershfield said the film is about how Mama C expresses African culture through art.

The two were introduced two years ago at a meeting in Raleigh at which Mama C was the speaker.

"I was so inspired by her story that I decided I wanted to make a film about her," said Hershfield, who traveled to Tanzania in 2011 to shoot the film.

Mama C's performance will touch on subjects about women, such as African-American women coming to terms with who they are, Hershfield said.

"A lot of her poems and music she writes really address issues that pertain to women in terms of identity and health," Hershfield said.

Mama C said her work exhibits influences of the blues, jazz and gospel that Kansas City was famous for during her childhood.

She said she has always been an artistic person.

"I'm inspired by just about everything," she said. "Whether it is a dream, whether it's the wind, or whether it's a wrinkle in my cloth."

Her husband, Pete O'Neal, founded Tanzania's United African Alliance Community Center in 1991 to promote ties between Tanzanian and American cultures.

The couple also created the Leaders of Tomorrow Children's Home, which is under the umbrella of the community center. They currently provide care for 22 children between the ages of 5 and 15.

Hershfield presented a screening of her documentary on Tuesday night at the Sonja Haynes Stone Center for Black Culture and History, and O'Neal attended, said Joshua Miller, a Ph.D. candidate who assisted Hershfield in planning the screening and today's performance.

Mama C said she thinks everyone is an artist.

"All you need to do is open up your soul, let it all run out, and try to keep up with it," she said.

Seils wins Carrboro seat, but turnout disappoints

Only 261 people voted in the election, 1.7 percent of Carrboro voters.

By Jenny Surane Assistant City Editor

Damon Seils is the newest member of the Carrboro Board of Aldermen after Tuesday's special election drew 261 voters - a 1.7 percent turnout.

Seils ran uncontested in Tuesday's election, which cost the town about $11,000.

Workers at the polls said they were disappointed with Tuesday's voter turnout, but they expected it.

Poll worker Helen Figueroa, who worked at the north Carrboro precinct, said her precinct usually sees about 30 percent of voters in nonpresidential elections.

But this week's special election drew just more than 1 percent of voters to the precinct.

"I don't think there was enough advertising in this particular election," Figueroa said.

"In general, we have good voter turnout, but with only one candidate it's different," she said.

Tracy Reams, director of the Orange County Board of Elections, said Tuesday's election was the first of its kind, so it's difficult to determine the cause of low voter turnout.

"We've never had an election where there was only one contest and only one candidate running," she said. "We don't have any election that we can compare this to."

Jake Gardner, who has worked at the north Carrboro precinct since 1980, said Tuesday's election was the lowest voter turnout he had ever seen.

Gardner said he thought the fact that Seils ran uncontested led many eligible voters to stay home.

"You wouldn't have expected anything different," he said.

Gardner said he feels the special election might not have been the best option for an uncontested race.

"The issue here is not who is running but rather if this is a necessary situation or not," he said. "There's a fair amount of money involved."

Tuesday's election could be the last of its kind for Carrboro.

Sen. Ellie Kinnaird, D-Orange and a former Carrboro mayor, has introduced a bill to the N.C. General Assembly that would give the board alternatives, such as appointments, to fill future vacancies.

Seils received 88 percent of the vote Tuesday, with write-in votes accounting for the remaining 12 percent.

Seils said despite the fact that he ran uncontested he took the election seriously.

He said he spent just less than $1,000 on campaign materials and went door-to-door in almost every neighborhood in Carrboro to talk to people about his platform.

Seils said he is eager to start his term as alderman.

'The first thing I'm going to want to do is get appointed to committees along the lines of the issues I care about," he said.

Seils celebrated his victory at the Looking Glass Cafe in Carrboro after the polls closed at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday.

"I'm ready to hit the ground running," he said.

get past the Wildcats, it will likely play top-seeded Kansas, a team Williams coached for 15 years before taking the job at his alma mater. That game would be played 40 miles from the Jayhawks' home turf.

In 2008, UNC lost to the Jayhawks 84-66 in the Final Four. Last year, Kansas ended UNC's tournament run in the Elite Eight 80-67.

Williams said he was confused by his team's draw but the only thing he can do now is focus on the task at hand.

"You say, 'Wow," Williams said, describing the potential matchup with Kansas. "But I'm thinking about Villanova."

"It was a surprise being No. 8. It was a little surprise going to play in Kansas City. But if you start thinking about playing Kansas in Kansas City, you forget about the biggest duty, and that's to win a game to even get there."

Dexter Strickland and P.J. Hairston stared blankly when asked what they knew about their upcoming opponent.

"They're from Philly," Hairston muttered. Members of the UNC coaching staff have been looking at tape of Villanova's season, during which the Wildcats beat top-seeded Louisville.

Strickland echoed his coach's thoughts about the eight-seed, adding that he was disappointed with the draw.

Still, the fourth-year senior has been through two other NCAA tournament trips with the Tar Heels. So no matter the opponent or its seed, he knows exactly where his mind will be.

"You don't realize until you're actually playing and you're down and you say to yourself, 'This is going to be the last game of the season.' That thought gets you to play even harder," Strickland said.

"I would just tell (the young guys), 'Just go down there, play to your full potential, give it your all, lose yourself out there on the floor. Because it might be your last game."

Ward said it might be a year or more before the new transfer station is finalized. and the town hopes to work with Carrboro and Orange County in the process.

County cutting costs

Though Chapel Hill, Carrboro and Orange County have separate waste management programs, all waste currently ends up in the Orange County Landfill.

Orange County Commissioner Earl McKee said the county plans to ship its trash to the Durham Waste Disposal and Recycling Center starting in June.

"The Durham station is designed for a higher capacity than it is currently being used for, so they were willing to work with us on an agreement," McKee said.

The tipping fee at the Durham station is $42.50 per ton-$14.50 less than the fee at the Orange County Landfill. But gas and other expenses would put the total cost for waste disposal at about $130,000 more than what the county currently pays annually.

Gayle Wilson, county solid waste management director, said the distance from all but ultimately Michael Braxton, a representative, received the email and shared it with the entire Student Congress via its listserv, saying the conversation showed that the bill was discriminatory.

Root said the conversation didn't pertain to the bill specifically but to his views on funding for ammunition.

"Accusing me of discrimination ... is the most ridiculous thing I've ever heard in my life," he said. "The purpose of sending it out was to slander my name because the conversation was presenting me in a negative light."

But Brady said Root never told him not to share the conversation, and that he was within his rights to share it with whomever he wanted. "He chose to file an eth-one of the county's five solid waste convenience centers to the Durham station is greater than the distance to the landfill.

But he said ongoing renovations to all five convenience centers are aimed at reducing overall costs.

"We're changing the methodology by which we handle garbage," Wilson said. "One part of the process is installing trash compactors, which allow you to more efficiently haul large amounts of waste."

Orange County Manager Frank Clifton said that for Orange County residents, not much will change in terms of solid waste disposal come June.

"People who get curbside pick-up will see that keep happening, people who go to convenience centers will keep doing that," he said. "But of course, waste disposal is an ongoing problem for the county."

The ethics committee voted to censure Brady, and the motion will be voted on by the full Student Congress next Tuesday.

SOFTBALL: UNC 9, NCCU 0; UNC 10, NCCU 2

Tar Heels spring back from losses

UNC's softball team beat N.C. Central twice Tuesday night.

By Daniel Wilco Staff Writer

The North Carolina softball team's spring break may have been unconventional, but players did have one thing in common with some of their peers — they got burned.

After being outscored 31-15 in a 1-4 week, UNC needed a break, and defeating North Carolina Central in five innings twice at home Tuesday night was the perfect opportunity for the Tar Heels to spring back into action.

"We had a rough spring break, and games like these are good for confidence and kind of tweaking everything before we go into bigger weekends like this weekend against FSU," senior Haleigh Dickey said.

UNC started both games out with swift strikes on offense. The Tar Heels scored five runs in the first two innings of the first game, a 9-0 rout of the Eagles.

In the second game's slightly more contested 10-2 win, North Carolina was still able to bring nine runs across the plate in the first two innings.

Dickey said the quick pace the Tar Heels had at the onset of the games offered a good opportunity for depth development.

"Scoring early in the games gives everyone a chance to get in the game," Dickey said. "Coach (Donna Papa) is very good at substituting people in, giving people chances, and it just makes it more fun for the whole team to be involved."

All but two of the 23 players on the team's roster saw action during the doubleheader, and the team managed 19 runs on 20 hits from 43 at-bats.

But the games didn't just offer experience for more players than usual.

"This just totally is good for confidence," Dickey said. "We need it every now and then to just go out there and be able to cream somebody."

Sophomore Kati Causey, who was three-for-three with two RBIs in the second game, said confidence gained against weaker opponents could play a key role in matchups with stronger teams.

"We just have to work on keeping our confidence up and making sure we can maintain our focus when we have tougher competition," Causey said.

The Tar Heels are undefeated at home, and Papa viewed the quick stop back in Chapel Hill before a road trip to Tallahassee, Fla., to face Florida State as a good time for UNC to get collected between tougher opponents. "We have a comfort zone at home and we tend to play well at home," Papa said. "It gives us a lot of energy going into the weekend."

For Papa, the momentum was a product of improved performance by the Tar Heels in their homestand.

"I think we did a better job today with being more patient and looking for more pitches," Papa said.

The Tar Heels have three games against FSU this weekend and are looking to capitalize on their recent strong performances at home.

But Papa realizes that the Tar Heels can't let their success go to their heads.

"Anything can happen," Papa said. "You just have to have the right mindset and be able to really go out there and fight for every at-bat and every out."

BASEBALL: NORTH CAROLINA 16, PRINCETON 0

Tar Heels blank Princeton

By Carlos Collazo Staff Writer

North Carolina baseball players Michael Russell and Mike Zolk do a lot of things together. They live together, they hit in the lineup together, they turn double plays together and they start rallies together. Zolk and Russell win baseball games — together. They might not get the recognition or shining stat sheets that Colin Moran, Skye Bolt, Cody Stubbs — and today Trent Thornton — get, but they contribute to those players' success in their own ways.

Trent Thornton led No.1 North Carolina (19-1) to a 16-0 win against Princeton (1-11), with Russell and Zolk right behind him.

The freshman right-hander threw seven innings, with seven strikeouts to one walk, and forced many ground balls off of Princeton's bats.

Zolk and Russell were consistently ready to turn those ground balls into outs.

The duo teamed up for a double play in the seventh in Thornton's final inning. Zolk, who has a quick exchange at second base while rolling the double play, did particularly well defensively.

"I really take pride in my defense more than anything else," Zolk said. "Making that routine play is most important to me.

"In practice, working on defense is really important to me, rather than just hitting."

Lately, Russell has also had a greater influence on the offensive side of the game. Russell, who has successfully stolen bases in seven of his eight attempts this season, got on base in front of Zolk against Princeton to allow him to drive in the team's first run.

"Michael can run a little bit, and (in) the last couple games has been swinging the bat really well," coach Mike Fox said.

Russell has been playing well lately despite suffering from turf toe, an injury for which he received a cortisone shot on Monday. Because of his recent success, Russell has edged out freshman Landon Lassiter for the starting job at shortstop.

And if Zolk can continue his elevated play at second base, he could end up getting a starting gig as well.

"We finally turned a double play tonight — two," Fox said. "We were sitting on eight for a while, and I was wondering

DTH/BROOKELYN RILEY Trent Thornton threw seven innings Tuesday and gave up five hits, all of them singles.

DTH ONLINE: Go online to read more about Thornton's performance.

when we were going to get to double-digit double plays.

"(Zolk)'s really been playing well at second base and turns a double play as well as anybody we have had in a while, so it was good to see us get some ground balls. (Russell and Zolk) have been playing well up the middle for us."

Russell said he feels right at home at shortstop, especially when Zolk is playing beside him.

"We have really good chemistry," Russell said. "We live together so we communicate real well, we are always talking in between plays and we are always on the same page with each other, so I am real comfortable with him."

Players like Moran, Bolt and Stubbs will get most of the credit offensively, especially after games like this one where they combined for seven hits, seven RBIs, and seven runs, but Russell and Zolk are there as well, quietly helping them out — together.

Acceptances to nursing school begin to increase

By Sarah Headley Staff Writer

After state budget cuts forced the UNC School of Nursing to cut its class size by 25 percent two years ago, the number of admitted students is now starting to increase.

With the release of admissions decisions March 7, the school accepted 16 more students than last year, split evenly between two undergraduate programs.

Out of 396 applicants, 26.3 percent — or 104 students — were admitted into the Bachelor of Science in Nursing program. The accelerated program accepted 17.8 percent, or 56 students, out of 315 applicants.

Beverly Foster, director of the undergraduate program, said the school has been working to combat negative effects of the budget cuts since 2011.

She said acceptance levels often rise and fall with the demand for nurses and status of the economy.

"I think it is a positive sign that the campus budgetary climate has eased sufficiently to accommodate 16 more students in the coming year," she said.

Amy Burdette, associate director for admissions in the school, said she does not anticipate more budget cuts.

But this year's incoming class, though larger than last year, is still smaller than it was before the cuts.

Foster said the smaller class sizes are frustrating for the admissions committee as well as the students.

"It's difficult for students, and it's painful for faculty to have to make those decisions," she said.

"Right now we have a wonderful supply of qualified students. One of the most painful things that the faculty does on the admissions committee is make choices."

"I was just really nervous because everyone that applies and goes here works hard enough and is qualified," she said. "I feel very privileged and blessed to be a part of the program."

But for students who were not admitted, Foster said there are other options.

"If a door has been closed one time, it's no reason to believe that it will always be closed," Foster said. "There are things that can be done."

She said applicants who were disappointed should consider what they can do to improve their applications for the next cycle.

"The other thing to do is to consider that there are many other nursing programs that are right within driving distance of Chapel Hill that are accredited and good quality."

But while the budget cuts are leading to reduced class sizes, Foster said the quality of the program will remain intact.

"We will not take in more students than we have resources to manage," Foster said.

"We're not going to expand capriciously without adequate resources to do that."

UNC music professor debuts third album

By Edmond Harrison Staff Writer

Jazz piano and composition professor Stephen Anderson said playing the piano was mandatory during his upbringing, but as an adult he is driven by a love of music.

Anderson released a new album this month, titled "Believe," with his jazz combo, the Stephen Anderson Trio.

"Believe" is the third album from the trio, consisting of bassist Jeffry Eckels, drummer Ross Pedersen and pianist Anderson - and guest artist Joel Frahm on the tenor saxophone.

For this album Anderson said he tried to write in a more free and loose style.

"I didn't worry about track order or sound – I'd wake up in the morning with a little ditty in my head and just start writing," Anderson said.

"A big part of composing is just getting your head in the right space ... These tunes just fell from the sky. To me, it was kind of a miracle project."

Library director returns to town and she is thrilled to return to Susan Brown Chapel Hill. will be the "It's a town that I love, and new director it's also a town that loves its library," she said.

Brown will return to a newly expanded Chapel Hill Public Library, which is scheduled to reopen in April.

But due to budget constraints, the library will operate on reduced hours.

Both Brown and her husband attended graduate school at UNC, and she said moving back to the area is a great opportunity – both professionally and personally.

Chapel Hill Town Council member Jim Ward, who is the liaison to the Library Board of Trustees, said he thought it was important to hire a director who helps the library become a library of the future.

"It's not just a place to shelve books, it's a community meeting place," Ward said. Ward said he hopes Brown can help turn the Chapel Hill Public Library into that place for residents.

"We need someone who can articulate that vision," he said.

And he said the town of Chapel Hill was rigorous in the process of selecting the director, using two rounds of selection to make the decision.

Candidates for the director position were reviewed by town and library staff as well as librarians from other communities, according to a press release.

Assessors also included representatives from the Library Board of Trustees, the Chapel Hill Public Library Foundation and Friends of the Chapel Hill Public Library.

The selection team placed a high value on candidates who would engage the community and embrace the digital age of the library.

Brown said she is looking forward to working with the town to set future priorities and goals for the library.

"I am so thrilled to have this opportunity to come back to Chapel Hill," she said.

»» Francis formally steps into role as pope

VATICAN CITY (MCT) Before crowned heads, government leaders and masses of the faithful, Pope Francis formally took office Tuesday as head of the Roman Catholic Church in a ceremony replete with pageantry and symbols from ancient Christendom.

Organizers expected hundreds of thousands of people to crowd into Vatican City and the surrounding streets for the ceremony.

"Let us never forget that authentic power is service and that the pope, too, when exercising power, must enter ever more fully into that service which has its radiant culmination on the cross," the bespectacled pontiff said, his voice ringing through loudspeakers set up in the square.

Marines killed in Nevada training explosion

LOS ANGELES (MCT) -Seven Marines were killed during a training exercise at a U.S. Army depot in western Nevada, Marine Corps officials said Tuesday.

The explosion shortly before 10 p.m. Monday at Hawthorne Army Depot also injured several others from the 2nd Marine Division at Camp Lejeune, N.C., according to a statement released to the Los Angeles Times by Marine Capt. Binford R. Strickland. At least eight injured were JOHANNESBURG (MCT) - In his seven yearson the run from international justice, Congolese warlord Bosco Ntaganda became a symbol of the International Criminal Court's impotence.

Now the court, which lacks a police force to arrest those it has indicted, will have an unexpected opportunity to demonstrate its relevance in Ntaganda's case.

The warlord who launched last year's rebellion in Eastern Congo, shocked everyone when he walked into the U.S. Embassy in the Rwandan capital of Kigali on Monday and asked to be handed over to the ICC to stand trial.

Hunger strikes growing in Guantanamo Bay

GUANTANAMO BAY NAVY BASE, Cuba (MCT) – Navy medical staff were treating two captives suffering dehydration in the prison camp hospital at Guantanamo as the military disclosed Tuesday that the number of hunger strikers had risen to 24.

The military said in a statement that eight of the 166 war-on-terror captives had missed enough meals and lost enough body weight to be fed nutritional supplements by tubes snaked up their noses and into their stomachs. Guards shackle detainees into restraint chairs to carry out the twice daily feedings.

The detainees claim through their lawyers that the hunger strike seeks to end prison camp searches of their personal copies of the Quran, which the prisoners argue has amounted to desecration. They claim that the hunger strike has been under way since early February with detainees drinking water or honey water for sustenance.

The prison camps' spokesman, Navy Capt. Robert Durand, denies that the staff has done anything but follow their years-old Quran-handling procedures, which permit Muslim linguists in the camps to search the books at the discretion of military commanders. Guards don't touch the Qurans, and the linguists treat the books with respect, he said.

A spring break by any other name t's 9 p.m. on a weekday, you're on spring break, and you're in a country where the drinking age is being able to look the bartender in the eyes without flinching.

Naturally, you head to the bar where your friends have been for more than half an hour, sipping fish bowls and wondering where the heck you were.

You kick back, take a couple down and forget about life, stress and your grade point average for two to seven hours

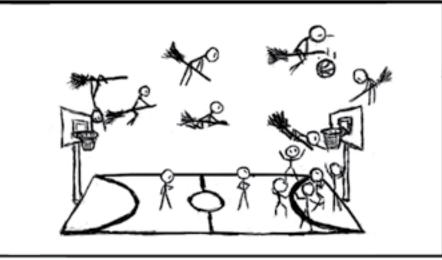

Then you saunter tipsily back to a seedy hostel and use your barely-passable-on-agood-day language skills to convince the groundskeeper he should totally let you in even though it's past midnight and you smell like coco locos.

After some fraction of a good drunken night's rest, you heave yourself out of bed, stuff your face with coffee and pastries and run down to the local orphanage.

There you play soccer, tear down cultural barriers and play a formative role in young, orphaned children's lives. This is followed by coming back, eating, napping, eating and starting all over again. Although this time you might want to take it easy on the

EDITORIAL Focus on the fixing

Title IX complaints won't be solved by punishment.

s the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights investigates UNC's handling of sexual assault, it should continue its history of working with schools to fix problems and improve policy rather than simply issuing a punishment that would hurt the University.

While it is within the office's power to decrease federal funding to certain universities, this isn't the way to solve problems with sexual assault policy.

A cut or complete withdrawal of funds would punish UNC without solving anything.

Moreover, federal funding cuts could hurt those who had little to do with forming or implementing the sexual assault policy. Cutting financial aid or housing funding doesn't seem to solve a thing.

Punishments as the default course of action encourage universities to rush to comply with laws simply to avoid losing funding, rather than getting to the root of the issues. When complaints are filed and universities are found to violate laws, working to solve the problem rather than immediately issuing punishments is vital.

In the past the office has worked with university officials to precisely identify and resolve problems with how Title IX violations are handled.

Taking this route with UNC will ensure that the problems with the current policy are thoroughly resolved to prevent future injustice and violence.

"The reason animal testing isn't discussed as often as you would like is because most people recognize it as a necessary evil."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Animal research seeks humane treatment

TO THE EDITOR:

I can't speak for every scientist or UNC employee who works with animals, but what Carolina Promoting Animal Welfare president Matt Leming (a sophomore computer science and Russian major) doesn't seem to acknowledge in his column, "Silence on vivisection," is that animal research is discussed very often among those of us who actually do it, and those close to the research.

Debates over the most humane way to sacrifice an animal are a common topic of debate for myself and another scientist, for example. And when possible, we use alternative models such as cell culture in order to avoid working with animals.

But animal research is the only way to study many diseases effectively. And I doubt anyone would want a doctor performing a surgery on humans who had never performed the procedure prior, or to attempt new techniques on humans.

When we design experiments, questions we ask include, "What can we learn? What benefit could we achieve for humans and the animals in our care? How can we minimize the number of animals to be sacrificed, and what is the most humane way we can sacrifice them?

These active discussions take place every grant writing season, and any scientist who d 46th in teacher pay, with starting salaries for teachers with a four-year degree being $30,800 before taxes.

Long-term dedication to teaching isn't rewarded either, as it takes 15 years of teaching to break even the $40,000 mark.

This is where North Carolina must step up to recruit stronger and more talented individuals into the teaching profession.

We will have more luck attracting bright, talented individuals to the classroom by paying them a salary that won't scare them away. Raising the starting salary for teachers in North Carolina will raise the prestige of the teaching profession. Setting North Carolina apart will attract the best talent to our state's schools.

But reform shouldn't stop there; we must also devote resources to retaining and rewarding high-quality teachers to ensure the future excellence of North Carolina's public schools.

County could benefit from more sidewalks

TO THE EDITOR:

As I read about the Orange County capital projects that include a jail and more emergency services, I get sad about their focus.

I wish N.C. took the infrastructure seriously with regard to a healthy lifestyle and opportunities to ride, walk or safely move across town on foot, bike or skateboard.

Sure, you can live in a small area and get around somewhat easily (Carrboro or downtown Chapel Hill) but to really get around without a car, you are taking your life in your own hands. Some do it, but it's not without anger from drivers or extreme personal Sound like a pretty intense spring break? I'll say.

But here's what's weird. Suppose you're going as a part of some organization, and weeks or months beforehand you thought you'd maybe learn a little about this distinct culture you wanted to make a positive, enduring impact on.

With that - and just one of those mornings of playing games with local kids or painting houses — all of a sudden you've got yourself what's come to be known as an "alternative" spring break trip.

Alternative to what? Well, everything else I suppose: working, visiting friends, getting nine kinds of crazy with hundreds of people on a beach, etc. - all of which are respectable options.

But why is it a different category altogether when you actually want to interact productively with a community other than your own on spring break? Shouldn't that be a default or at least the ideal?

Spring break is just that - a break — but it's also an opportunity to step out of sheltered university life for a few days and make some new connections with the world outside of our socioeconomic peer group.

That can mean getting free shots from the guy who cleans the hostel toilets or just sharing a dance and an awkward conversation with a mysterious foreign lady, but it's better if it doesn't end there.

Learn a few more things about the real world; be openminded.

And who knows, maybe some of us will get a better idea of what we actually want to do with our lives when we're finally out there for good.

But if nothing else, we should at least be sure to pick up after ourselves. Tipping well is good, too.

and unrealistic.

his editorial board has said it over and over again. It is time Chapel Hill repeals the ordinance banning more than four unrelated people from residing in the same house. The Land Use Management Ordinance, which restricts the number of occupants, is unrealistic and in need of a revision.

The ordinance unfairly burdens landlords and students alike from pursustudents residing in houses allows students to pay affordable rent and landlords to receive fair value for their property.

Affordable student housing can be hard to come by, and limiting the number of unrelated occupants pushes students farther away.

Landlords are often willing to skirt the ordinance by signing only four names to a lease and putting students in danger. Town residents must to be disruptive. Pegging the number of unrelated residents in a house to the number of bedrooms seems like a fair compromise for the town to settle disputes between family and student neighbors.

It is not reasonable to expect students to have only four occupants in an eight bedroom house. There simply are not enough four bedroom homes available around the campus.

COLUMN Elevating Israel dialogue

Inaccurate "apartheid" rhetoric inflames and divides.

he pro-Israel community at UNC is committed to open dialogue around the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and together creating a space where all students feel respected. We are saddened and frustrated when the campus community turns to one-sided finger pointing.

Israeli Apartheid Week. put on by UNC Students for Justice in Palestine, directly challenges those interested in peace by blaming Israel alone for the conflict and incorrectly labeling Israel as an apartheid state. This week, organized nationally on college campuses, often creates silence between pro-Israel and pro-Palestine groups; at worst, it creates hostile environments.

Our organizations have different perspectives. Hillel inspires students to build a personal relationship with Israel and is broadly committed to supporting Israel as a Jewish and democratic state with secure and recognized borders. Heels for Israel is committed to resolving the conflict through direct negotiations without third-party involvement, leading to a two-state solution that assures the Jewish State of Israel's national security.

Even with these differences, we agree that Israel proper is not an apartheid (racially separated) state. There are Palestinians serving in the Israeli Parliament and Supreme Court, and the declaration of independence affirms equality for all.

Paying teachers more will make a real impact

TO THE EDITOR:

As Monday's article on K-12 funding suggests, a well-funded public education system is important to create a productive and successful state.

North Carolina may not spend the most per pupil in \hat{K} -12 education, but simply throwing more money into education will not create results. The state legislature must devote financial resources to policies proven to boost student achievement.

Research shows teachers are the single most important in-school factor in student achievement.

peril. Unfortunately, we're eating, sitting and driving like it's 2013.

Parts of the county and private groups for health and safety in N.C. try to address this, but it's not a cultural belief, and so N.C. enjoys being a top-20 state for obesity.

It's hard to be healthy when you're seriously damaged (or worse) from being hit by a car.

A healthy lifestyle has to be integrated into the process of a community.

Yes, there are paths and gyms and places to walk, bike or run safely, after we park our car which we had to take to get to the path, pool or gym.

I hope the commissioners and others will consider the larger implications of other beneficial infrastructure like paths, shoulders and sidewalks as this area grows and changes.

ness of the problems facing Palestinians. However, calling Israel an apartheid state focuses solely on Israel's faults, ignoring the intersection of the rights and national aspirations of both peoples.

We do not want to shy away from the truths and sadness on both sides. Rather, we should create a space where pro-Israel and pro-Palestine groups can work together. We should listen to both the tragedy in the West Bank and the fears of Israeli citizens living with security concerns.

We call on all students to share in educating our campus about what it takes to achieve peace, bringing in speakers with a range of views and following varying news sources. It also means understanding the region's history and the sensitivities that shut down conversation rather than encourage it.

We desire peace and want to see a bilaterally agreed upon two-state solution resulting in a Palestinian state alongside Israel. We call upon students to come together to discuss steps we can take toward justice and peace.
