Business students to take part in exclusive conference

Students from UNC's Kenan-Flagler Business School, along with students from the University of Miami, Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner, Senator Orrin Hatch and U.S. Ambassador to China Jon Huntsman, among others, will take part Wednesday in an online conference sponsored by The Atlantic and Microsoft on the economy of the future and how to create jobs.

The public can submit questions and comments at <http://www.job-sandeconomy.com>, a website dedicated to the event.

Business school publishes a playbook by successful alum

Students interested in becoming a chief executive officer — or even just making mildly successful strides in the business world — could be intrigued by a new posting on the Kenan-Flagler Business School website.

That posting is a list of business and management techniques as compiled by Ron Lattanze, who was an executive with Guidant Corporation for several years, leading one of its units from $0 in sales to nearly $1 billion in less than two years.

Lattanze spoke at the school in January, but it is now posting his "playbook," a compendium of advice ranging from team building to dealing with obstacles.

Chapel Hill Transit closes bus stop at Caribou Coffee

The bus stop located on West Franklin Street at Caribou Coffee on the J and F Chapel Hill Transit bus routes is closed temporarily due to construction.

Alternate stops nearby are the West Franklin Street and Church Street stops.

New Latin fitness program for kids to begin in March

Chapel Hill Parks and Recreation is offering a new dance fitness class called ZumbAtomic for children ages 5 to 12.

ZumbAtomic is a fitness program that teaches children dances and rhythms to Latin music and fitness games.

The first session of the class will be held at the Chapel Hill Community Center Gym on Sundays from 5:30 p.m. to 6:15 p.m. from March 20 to April 10.

A second session will be offered from May 1 to May 22 at the same time and place.

The class costs $35 for Chapel Hill and Orange County residents and $42 for all others.

Participants must pre-register online at www.townofchapelhill.org/register or at the Parks and Recreation office or a community center, and payment is due the first day of class.

Student at Chapel Hill High School to direct peers in play

Chapel Hill High School student Nora Burgard will direct her peers in performing Tennessee Williams' play "The Glass Menagerie."

The play is set in the deep South and tells the tale of the narrator's time spent living with his mother and sister.

The students will put on the show in Hanes Auditorium at Chapel Hill High Feb. 17 to Feb. 19. Tickets will cost $3 at the door, and the performance is rated PG.

Local students visit the NC School of Science and Math

Students involved in the Math Olympiad team at Rashkis Elementary School visited the North Carolina School of Science and Mathematics last week.

About 45 fourth and fifth grade students participated in the tour and information session. The purpose of the trip was to encourage the students' interests in math and science.

Students learned about the opportunities beyond math and science that are available at the school and got tips on how to get accepted.

While at the school, Middle School Admissions Counselor Kim Logan spoke to the students and showed them the school's campus including its science labs, athletic facilities, art room and other classrooms.

Three named for research role BOG member under scrutiny

Entwisle of UNC included as finalist

BY KATIA MARTINEZ
STAFF WRITER

After several months of searching for UNC's next vice chancellor for research, three finalists have emerged: a familiar face, a former UNC department chairman and a wild card.

"We feel that the candidates we've selected have outstanding credentials and we're excited to work with them in the coming months to properly select which person we want in this position," said Karen Gil, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and chairwoman of the search committee.

Among the candidates is Barbara Entwisle, who has held the position on an interim basis since Aug. 1. She has worked at the University for 29 years.

She said she is honored to be a finalist, citing her current position as helpful experience for not only the application process but also the future execution of the position.

"If I were choosing a vice chancellor, I would want to look at all relevant experience, which would include my current performance," Entwisle said.

In her nearly three decades at UNC, Entwisle has been a sociology professor, a geology professor, and the director of the Carolina Population Center.

Also in the pool is David Lee, vice president for research at the University of Georgia. Lee, who worked at UNC for 20 years before beginning his position in Athens, Ga., said he is excited for the possibility of a return to Chapel Hill.

"It's almost like my alma mater," Lee said. "I have very fond feelings attached to that campus, and I am excited to get back and hopefully reconnect with it."

Lee, a former UNC biochemistry and biophysics department chairman, said he is also excited to experience UNC's research and medical departments again.

"As great as UGA is, we've only recently started our medical school here, and it's focused more on teaching the topics than researching them," he said. "UNC is one of the best research schools in the country and I am excited about possibly having the opportunity to work with it again."

Kimberly Espy, associate vice chancellor for research at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, is the other finalist, bringing to the position several years of experience.

She has been traveling and unavailable for comment for the past several days.

The search officially began late last November and attracted a large

LATE BLOCK STOPS DUKE

Rolle swats final Blue Devil shot

BY KELLY PARSONS
ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR

As the clock wound down in Carmichael Arena and the North Carolina women's basketball team led Duke by just two, the Blue Devils drove down the court in a last-ditch effort to tie the score.

Duke's Chelsea Gray, who had already picked up a season-high 20 points, attempted a buzzer-beating layup.

Waltiea Rolle was in the right place at the right time.

"I was just helping, waiting for her to get there," the 6-foot-6 Tar Heel center said. "I saw it coming, so I just blocked it."

Rolle had already scored 10 points and grabbed a team-leading nine rebounds. But that game-saving block would be her biggest contribution of the night.

Saving her team from overtime, Rolle helped No. 13 UNC to a 62-60 win against No. 5 Duke.

The junior had seven blocks during the game, two of them in the final three minutes.

For coach Sylvia Hatchell, grooming her tallest player has been a work in progress, but in moments like these, she sees how far she's come.

"Waltiea never touched the basketball until she was in the ninth grade," Hatchell said. "When we recruited her she was really raw. But she's worked really hard and she's gotten a lot stronger. She has great timing ... and size makes a big difference."

Despite the heart-racing ending for UNC, the game didn't exactly start that way. The Tar Heels didn't get their first basket until three minutes into the game, and the Blue Devils went on an early 11-2 run that forced Hatchell to signal timeout.

"I don't know what was wrong with us when we first started," Hatchell said. "Duke started off strong. Then we finally settled down and started playing. I don't know if they were just caught up in the Carolina-Duke thing, or what it was."

But the Tar Heels weren't helpless for long. Tierra Ruffin-Pratt

Chapel Hill to feel new pulse

A new nightclub is coming to 136 E. Rosemary St. this month, with a tentative opening night of Feb. 11.

Richard Sergo, a junior at UNC, said he realized that Chapel Hill needed more nightclubs and pitched the idea of opening Club Pulse to his family, who now owns the new business.

"You can actually come and relax and enjoy yourself, or you can come out and grind on the dance floor all night long," Sergo said.

Club Pulse, which will be an 18 and up venue, will have a cover charge of up to $10, depending on the age group and time of night, Sergo said.

It has more than 5,000 square feet of space and will have a maximum capacity of approximately 560 people.

"There's no way to enjoy yourself when you're slammed up against other people," he said. "I'm trying to keep it a classy place."

Students to sell accessories

Two UNC students are finding a new way to give back to the community while simultaneously furthering their studies.

On Feb. 4, Taylor Walters and Chelsea Crites, both seniors, will open 4, an accessories store that will sell jewelry, scarves, handbags and a variety of other accessories at 149 E. Franklin St.

Walters said most items will cost between $20 and $55.

"It came out of an independent study that Chelsea and I are doing with advertising professor Dana McMahan," Walters said.

The profits from 4 will go to the Ronald McDonald House of Chapel Hill, the Center for Child & Family Health in Durham, TABLE in Carboro and the Arc of Orange County.

"Chelsea and I each picked two," Walters said. "I picked mine because they provide such a great service to the community, and I wanted to supplement this service."

New focus on group fitness

Studio East 54, a new fitness center in Chapel Hill, will have its grand opening Feb. 19.

Owner Katie Martin said the center will focus on group workouts, offering four programs: Pilates, TRX Suspension Training, Xtend Barre and Zumba.

"Basically I wanted to bring together some of the hottest fitness workouts together in one place in Chapel Hill," Martin said.

One-time class fees will range from $15 to $20, and value packs will be offered as well. Students can also receive a 10 percent discount with a valid student ID.

The center will not charge a membership fee but does offer a monthly unlimited package.

Studio East 54 will provide a more personalized and intimate setting than your average gym, Martin said.

"I've put together four fun programs," she said. "It's all about not being bored."

Antonia's replaces Tupelo's

A new Italian restaurant will replace popular Southern restaurant Tupelo's later this month.

Tupelo's, which was located at 101 N. Churton St. in Hillsborough, closed Jan. 10.

The business was bought by Phillip Smith, his wife Antonia Berto, Claudia Salvatore and Naomi Lundahl.

"The hardest thing about it was that the business was excellent as far as how busy we were," said Tupelo's owner Matt Carroll. "The location was wonderful but the building was very old and very hard to keep up."

The new venue will be called Antonia's Restaurant and will serve authentic Italian and Mediterranean cuisine.

The restaurant will be using naturally raised meat and local ingredients in their menu, Smith said.

"It's going to be hearty and fresh, a lot of homemade products," he said.
