Naked cooking show coming to TV

FROM STAFF AND WIRE REPORTS

Hong Kong model Flora Cheung is set to debut a cooking show in which she will prepare local favorites while wearing a fully transparent apron that leaves little to the imagination.

Cheung, who has no professional culinary experience, said the risqué show is a bid to get more men in the kitchen.

“Most men don’t like to cook, but I want to get them interested,” she said.

On the show, which premieres later this month, Cheung will prepare personal favorites such as fried vermicelli and ox tongue in wine sauce.

The show will be broadcast in Cantonese, but network representatives said viewers who speak any language will be able to follow.

NOTED. A New York University professor who had a camera installed in the back of his head underwent surgery to remove the device after it was rejected by his body.

The plan was for the camera to take pictures to be live-streamed every minute to a Qatar museum over the course of a year.

But antibiotics and steroids didn’t treat the constant pain the gadget caused.

QUOTED. “It seemed only right for us to explore this re-use of energy.”

— Carole Gandy, a central England council-woman, on her local authority’s decision to heat a swimming pool with the energy from the crematorium next door.

In the first-of-its-kind plan, waste heat from the incinerator chimney will warm up the nearby leisure center and pool.
